THE HISTORY OF

tians. Wars between Cæsar and the Venetians, who are defeated in the Vicentine.

1512.

 F T E R the Pope was thus delivered out of a most calamitous and dangerous Situation by a surprising Train of successful Events, and had obtained the Victory over his Enemies, and recovered and enlarged the Dominions of the Church, it appeared that he had not relinquished his old covetous Pretensions to the City of Ferrara, the Sparks that first kindled so mischievous a Combustion. And though he was ardently desirous of turning his Arms against the Duke, yet, either because he thought it easier to obtain his Ends by way of Accommodation than by War, or trusted more to secret Artifices than to plain and open Dealings, he chose to hearken first to the Marquis of Mantoua, who supplicated him to grant Leave to Alfonso d'Este to come in Person to Rome, humbly to ask Pardon of his Holiness, and beg that he would receive him into Favour on any

any honourable Conditions. He was A. D. afterwards pleased to lend an Ear to the <sup>1512.</sup> Aragonian Ambassador, who interceded for the Duke as a Relation by Consanguinity to his King, Alfonso being born of a Daughter of the old Ferdinando King of Naples, and because it was more for his Master's Interest to lay an Obligation on the Duke by so great a Favour, than to suffer the Church to increase its Grandeur by a further Addition of his State. The Colonna's also were unwearied in their Endeavours for the same Purpose, as they were become cordial Friends to Alfonso, because the King of France, after the Battle of Ravenna, having demanded of him Fabritio Colonna his Prisoner, the Duke, first by denying, and afterwards interposing various Excuses, so long delayed to grant the King's Request, till the succeeding Revolution of Affairs put it in his Power to give Fabritio his Liberty, in the most acceptable Manner, without any Compensation.

The Duke then took his Journey to Rome, having obtained a Pass from the Pope,

3 A

and,

A. D. and, for his greater Security, the King of 1512. Aragon, by his Minister, with the Pope's Consent, passed his royal Word for his safe Going and Return. After his Arrival the Pope, having suspended his Censures, admitted him into the Consistory, where he humbly asked Pardon, and sup-plicated, in the most submissive Manner, to be restored to the Favour of his Holiness and of the Apostolic See, promising for the future to perform all those Duties and Services that belonged to a most faithful Feodatory and Vassal of the Church. The Pope heard him favourably enough, and appointed six Cardinals to treat with him about Conditions of an Agreement, who, after several Days spent in Debates, intimated to him that his Holiness did not intend in any Manner to deprive the Church of the City of Ferrara, which belonged to it by lawful Reversion ; but that he would give him in recompense the City of Asti, which, by the Departure of the French, being reduced under the Power of the League, the Pope, pretending that all on this Side of the Po appertained to the Church, had sent, though without Effect, of it, But Alfonso constantly rejected the Duke rejects the Pope's

Offer.
Proposal, and from this Demand, so contrary to the Hopes that had been given him, and no less from what had lately happened at Reggio, began to be apprehensive that the Pontiff artfully amused him with Offers at Rome, that he might have an Opportunity at the the same time to execute some Design upon Ferrara.

The Pope had invited the People of Reggio, who were under no small Apprehensions from the present turbulent Juncture, to follow the Example of Parma and Piacenza, by putting themselves into the Hands of the Church; and, that his Sollicitations might have the more Effect, had ordered the Duke of Urbino, with some Troops, into the Modenese. Vitfrust had made the same Attempt in behalf of Cæsar, for which End he went in Person to Reggio; and the Cardinal d'Este, who in the Absence of his Brother had the Management of his State, knowing that he could not preserve that City, and judging that it would be less pernicious to the fairs a greater Variety might be expected*, adviſed the Inhabitants rather to acknowledge themſelves under the Jurifdiction of the Empire. But they answered that they would follow the Example of their Duke, who was gone to wait upon the Pontiff, and not upon Cæſar, and introduced into the Town the Troops of the Church, who by their artful Management got Poſſeſſion alſo of the Cittadel, though Vitſruſt had put a Garrifon into it. At laſt the Car-fagnana alſo ſurrendered to the Duke of Urbino, who after that returned to Bologna, where he diſbanded all his Troops.

 For the Confederates being highly diſſatis-fied with the Pope at his taking Poſſeſſion of Parma and Piacenza, the Cardinal of Sion had cauſed it to be notified to the Duke that the common Enemies being vanquiſhed and overthrown, it was not ne-ceſſary to proceed any farther.

BUT

* And conſequently an Opportunity might offer from his Neceſſities, which often conſtrained him to Alienations, to redeem or purchaſe it out of his Hands; but the Property of the Church was not to be alienated or transferred.

A. D.

BUT the Duke of Ferrara, being under no small Apprehensions from the Pope's Obduracy, and his possessing himself of Reggio, demanded, by means of the Spanish Ambassador and Fabritio Colonna, which Noblemen had never left him since he came to Rome, his Leave to return to Ferrara. The Pope shewed himself reluctant to this Demand, and declared that the Pass he had given the Duke on account of his Differences with the Church was no Protection against his private Creditors, many of whom had demanded Justice to be done them. The Ambassador and Colonna frankly answered, that he ought not to persuade himself that they would suffer him to break his Faith with the Duke and them. And the next Morning, to prevent any new Obstacles from the Pope, Fabritio mounted on Horseback, and rode towards the Gate of San Giovanni in La- Duke of terano, the Duke and Marc' Antonio Co- Ferrara lonna following at a small Distance. At flies from Rome.
the Gate he found a much stronger Guard than usual, which forbid his Passage; but he being too strong overpowered them, and waited fully recompensed him, as is commonly believed, for the Kindness he had received of him in granting him his Liberty, since none doubted but that the Pope, if he had not been prevented by the Colonna's, would have imprisoned him; but now his Passage being intercepted by Land, he returned not long after by Sea to Ferrara*.

DURING these Transactions the Pontiff, retaining the same Enmity that he had before to the Liberty of the Florentines, procured, by means of the Cardinal of Sion, that the auxiliary Soldiers which they had granted to the King of France should be disarmed and stripped. Of these Castle by means of Prospero Colonna, disguised sometimes in the Dress of a Carrier, sometimes of a Hunter, sometimes of a Friar, till he arrived at a Place of Security.

Bembo tells us that, finding his Return by Land was unsafe, he got into Puglia, from whence he passed by Sea to Sclavonia, and thence to the Mouth of the Po, and so to his own Home.

Hundred and Twenty Men at Arms, and A. D. 1512.
 Sixty light Horse, the rest under Fran- cesco Torello remaining in Garrison at Brescia, had, before the French passed the Po, obtained a Pass from Sion, and the Word of Honour of Gian Pagolo Baglione, and of almost all the other Venetian Commanders for their safe Return into Tuscany.
 But as they were in their Quarters near Cremana, the Venetian Soldiers, according to the Directions which they had received, fell upon them, and plundered them, with the Consent of Sion, who, as some affirm, that the Fact might be committed with the more Safety, had sent thither Two Thousand Foot, considering that they were quartered with the Regiments of Trivulzio and the Grand Shield-bearer of France, which, because they were almost wholly composed of Italians, had also obtained a Pass. As soon as the Plunder was committed, the Cardinal of Sion sent to Chri- stoporo Moro and Pagolo Capello, the Proveditors of the Senate, to demand the Booty as belonging to the Swiss ; but they refusing it, and going the next Day to the Camp of the Swiss to confer with Sion, Perfidious Dealings of the Cardinal of Sion. were

A. D. were seized and carried as Prisoners before 1512. Jacopo Staffier their General, and by him conducted to the Cardinal, where they were forced to enter into an Obligation to pay Six Thousand Ducats in Compensation for what they had seized, his Eminence not chusing that any others but the Swiss should reap the Fruits of his Perfidy; of which he gave another Specimen by insisting that Nicolo Capponi, the Florentine Ambassador, who had retired to Casal Cerva- gio, and had obtained a Pass from him, should be delivered up to him as a Prisoner by the Marquis of Monferrato.

IN the mean time the Venetian Senate, desirous to employ their Strength for the Recovery of Brescia and Crema, earnestly solicited the Return of their Forces, which the Cardinal, on Pretence of leading them, in Conjunction with the Swiss, into Piedmont against the Duke of Savoy and the Marquis of Saluzzo, who had taken the Part of the King of France, would not permit. And that Reason afterwards ceasing by the great Increase of the Number of the Swiss, and the Assurance that

that the French Troops were passed beyond A. D. the Mountains, the Cardinal would nei- 1512. ther give his Consent nor Refusal to the Departure of these Troops ; which was supposed to proceed from the Instances of Cæsar, with a Design that the Senate should not recover those Towns. But while the Swiss were in Alexandria, the Venetian Troops on a sudden departed from Bosco, and passed the Po without any Hindrance Venetians to Cava in the Cremonese, the Cardinal, separate who doubtless might have prevented them, from the Swiss.
conniving at their Departure, as it was supposed, at the Request of the Pope.
The Venetians having passed the Po, divided their Forces, Part of which marched against Brescia, and the rest against Crema, which Towns were garrisoned by the French. The Garrison of Brescia making a Sally, and attacking the Venetians at the Village of Paterna, were repulsed within their Walls with the Loss of above Three Hundred Men*.

dred and Fifty taken Prisoners, who were all knocked on had suffered. Mocenigo.

1512.

THE Swiss, now left alone in the Dutchy of Milan and in Piedmont, employed themselves in taxing all the Country, being entirely secure of the French: For the King of France, though, out of his intense Affection to the Dutchy of Milan, he could not dispose himself, without much Regret, to leave the Affairs of Italy wholly abandoned, was yet constrained by Necessity to hearken to the Counsels of those who advised him to defer his Thoughts on that Head to another Time, and to attend, for that Summer, to the Defence of the Kingdom of France, considering that the King of England, by Agreement with the Catholic King, had sent by Sea Six Thousand English Foot to Fontarabia, a Town of the Kingdom of Spain, seated on the Ocean, with a Design, in Conjunction with the Forces of that King, to invade the Dutchy of Guyenne. Besides this, he had begun to infest the Coasts of Normandy and Bretany with a Fleet, to the great Terror of the Inhabitants of the Maritime Parts. And there was no Hopes of regaining the

THE WARS IN ITALY. 15

Friendship of Cæsar; for by the Report A. D. 1512. made by the Bishop of Marseilles, his Ambassador to that Prince, he understood that he was utterly averse to a Reconciliation, and wheedled him with Abundance of Hopes, and treated with him about a Multitude of Affairs, with the deepest Diffimulation, for no other End but to gain an Opportunity to oppress him before he was aware, or, at least, to give him as it were a mortal Blow, as he boasted he had done in recalling the German Troops from his Service. King of France the Dupe of Cæsar.

ITALY then being secured, for this Year, from the Arms of the French, tho' they were still in Possession of Brescia, Crema, Lignago, the Castelletto and Lantern of Genoa, the Castles of Milan and Cremona, with some other Fortresses in the Dutchy of Milan, there appeared some Signs of a Difference and Difunion between the Confederates, whose Views and Interests were very different. The Venetians were desirous to recover Brescia and Crema, which were their Due by the Articles of their Alliance, and because they had so Diffensions between the Allies.
First Cause.

A. D. great a Share in the Dangers and Trou-1512. bles of the War ; the Pope also was willing to gratify their Desires. On the other hand Cæsar, by whose Will the King of Aragon must at last be directed, designed to appropriate these Towns to himself, and besides to deprive the Venetians of all that was adjudged to him by the Treaty of Cambray. Cæsar and the Catholic King privately treated between themselves about causing the Dutchy of Milan to devolve on one of their common Nephews.
 On the contrary the Pope and the Swiss openly used all their Endeavours for the Restoration of Massimiliano, the Son of Lodovico Sforza, who after the Ruin of his Father had constantly resided in Ger- many, to his paternal Dignity, according to the first Agreement. What induced the Pope was his Desire that Italy might not fall entirely under Slavery to the Ger- mans and Spaniards ; and the Swiss were moved, by the Consideration of their own Advantage, to wish that the State of Milan might not be governed by too potent a Prince, but by one who could not support himself without their Assistance. But this Affair

Affair depending almost entirely upon <sup>A. D.</sup> them, in whose Power that State was, <sup>1512.</sup> and the Terror of their Arms being in high Reputation, the Pope, to confirm them in their Resolution, and that he might use them on all Occasions as a Bridle ready at Hand, for restraining the Ambition of Cæsar and the Catholic King, employed all his Art and Industry to gain their Friendship. For this End, besides publicly extolling to the Skies the Valour of the Helvetian Nation, and magnifying the Exploits which they had performed for the Welfare of the Apostolic See, to do them Honour he presented them with the Banners of the Church, and bestowed upon them the very glorious Title of Aiders and Defenders of the Ecclesiastic Liberty.

ANOTHER Cause of Diffension among <sup>Second</sup> the Allies was occasioned as follows: The <sup>Cause.</sup> Viceroy having recruited the Spanish Troops which after the Defeat at Ravenna had all retired together with him into the Kingdom of Naples, and put himself in Motion to pass with them into Lombardy,

A. D. bardy, the Pope and the Venetians refused 1512. to renew the Payment of the Forty Thousand Ducats a Month, which had been intermitted after the Defeat, alledging that, since the French were passed beyond the Mountains, they were not subject to that Obligation, which, according to the Articles of the Confederacy, ceased whenever the French should be driven out of Italy. To this it was answered, in behalf of the King of Aragon, that the King of France could not be said to be driven out of Italy while Brescia, Crema, and so many Fortresses besides were in his Power.

Third Cause.

BESIDES this, the Catholic King complained together with Cæsar that the Pontiff appropriating to himself the Rewards of the common Victory, and usurping what manifestly belonged to others, had, on Pretences either counterfeit, or grown obsolete by Length of Time, taken Possession of Parma and Piacenza, Cities that for a long Succession of Years had been held by those who were Lords of Milan as Fiefs of the Empire.

THERE

THERE appeared also among the Allies a Diversity of Sentiments with respect to the Affairs of the Duke of Ferrara, the Pontiff being inflamed with the same covetous Desire of acquiring his State, and the King of Aragon equally desirous to preserve him, and besides provoked against the Pope, as it was supposed, for attempting to detain the Duke at Rome, contrary to his Word given to him. For these Reasons the Pope abstained for the present from molesting Ferrara, waiting perhaps till Affairs of greater Importance were first settled; in the Determination of which Cæsar being willing to intervene, sent into Italy the Bishop of Goritz, who had been appointed for that Expedition so long ago as when, after the Battle of Ravenna, a Peace was treated of between the Pontiff and the King of France, because he was apprehensive that an Agreement might be concluded between them without any Regard had to his Interest; and, though a Revolution succeeded in the public Affairs, he continued in his Resolution to send the Bishop.

1512.

Neutrality of the Flo-
censured.

THERE came also under Consideration the Affairs of the Florentines, who labouring under Doubts and Suspicions began to feel the bad Effects of that Neutrality which they had imprudently chosen, and to be convinced that it was no sufficient Security to rely on the Justice of the Cause where Prudence was wanting. For in the present War they had not offended the Confederates, nor lent the King of France any Succours but what they were obliged to furnish for the Defence of the State of Milan, by the Confederacy they had made with him in Conjunction with the Catholic King. They had not suffered the Spanish Soldiers, in their Flight from the Battle of Ravenna, to be molested in their Dominions, for which the King of Aragon, with his own Mouth, had returned Thanks to the Florentine Ambassador. And, what is more, they had entirely gratified his Demands by correspondent Facts; for after the Departure of the Council from Pisa, both his Ministers in Italy, and the King himself had offered to their Ambassador to be obliged to defend their Republic against against all Assaults, provided they promised A. D. not to defend Bologna, nor bear Arms against 1512.

 the Church nor favour the Pisan Conventicle; which was observ'd. But they, being prevented by their civil Broils from chusing the better Part, neither joined with the King of France nor with the Allies ; and observing Day after Day a Kind of dubious Neutrality, the Result of unsteady and broken Counsels, but never coming to an unanimous Resolution, nor making a public Declaration that they would observe it, they highly offended the King of France, who had at first promised himself great Assistance from them, not in the least mitigated the Hatred of the Pope, and suffered the King of Aragon to enjoy, without any Recompense, the Fruits of their Neutrality, which he would gladly have purchased by an Agreement.

THE Pontiff then, stimulated by his Hatred of the Gonfaloniere, and by the antient Desire, inherent in the Popes, of having Authority in that Republic, earnestly sollicitated the Restoration of the Family of the Medici to its pristine Grandeur, the King

A. D. King of Aragon also, though his Words 1512. to the Florentine Ambaffador did not agree with his Actions, concurring, but not with fo much Ardor, in the fame Project, from an Apprehenfion that in cafe of any Movement the Republic would be biaffed, by the Authority of the Gonfaloniere, in favour of the King of France; nay it was fufpected that even if the Gonfaloniere were removed, and a free Government instituted, the new-created and antient Dependencies on the Crown of France would fway the Commonwealth to the fame Side. But the Refolutions to be taken on this Head were referved, together with other Points, for the Coming of Goritz, with whom the Viceroy and the Minifters of the other Confederates had appointed a Congrefs at Mantoua.

Congrefs at Mantoua.

WHILE Goritz was on his Journey the Pope fent to Florence Lorenzo Pucci, a Florentine, his Datary, and afterwards a Cardinal by the Title of Santi Quattro, who, in Concert with the Agent of the Viceroy, follicited the Florentines to join in the League, and to contribute towards the

This was the Pretext alledged for his Coming, but his real Business was to explore the Minds of the Citizens. Many Days were spent in debating on his Demands, without coming to a Conclusion; the Florentines offering to pay a certain Sum of Money to the Confederates, but to the Demand of entering into the League, and declaring against the King of France, they returned a dubious Answer. The Reason why they answered in general and evasive Terms was partly an Opinion (which was true) that these Proposals were made with an artful Design to ensnare them; in which they were confirmed by the Answer made at Trent by the Bishop of Goritz to their Ambassador whom they had sent to meet him. For that Prelate, when he was put in mind of the Agreement made with Cæsar at Vicenza, and signed with his own Hand, by which he was bound to defend the Florentines, seemed to make no Account of it, but assured him that the Pontiff had a Design to molest them, and that Cæsar, on their paying him Forty Thousand Du-

A. D. 1512. cats, would deliver them from that Danger. He added that the Confederacy between Cæsar and the King of France still subsisted, and therefore he advised them not to enter into the League till Cæsar had acceded to it. The Florentines would not have been averse from purchasing their Tranquillity with a Sum of Money, had they not doubted that the Authority of Cæsar alone, tho' Goritz affirmed that the Spaniards would conform themselves to his Will, was not sufficient to secure them from the ill Designs of the others; they stood therefore in Suspense, that they might with the more mature Advice dispose of their Balm to him who had it in his Power to apply it to their Infirmary. This was perhaps wisely considered; but then it happened that, either through Imprudence, or their usual Contentions, or too much Confidence in the Militia of their own Dominions, they neglected to provide themselves with a Body of well-disciplined Troops, which would have been always in readiness to defend them against a sudden Attack, or at least have served to facilitate an Agreement with the Con-

Confederates, who would be the more A. D. easily disposed to it when they knew it <sup>1512.</sup> would be difficult to force them into their Terms.

DURING these Transactions the Viceroy Spaniards at the Head of the Spanish Foot ar-<sup>mutiny.</sup> rived in the Bolognese, but being in Want of Money, his Troops, disappointed of their promised Pay, ran in so tumultuous a Manner to his Tent, threatening to murder him, that he had hardly Time to save himself by flying privately towards Modena. Part of these Forces moved towards the Country of the Florentines; the rest continued in their Quarters, but lived in a lawless Manner, without Order or Command, till after three or four Days their Spirits were composed by receiving Part of their Arrears, and the Viceroy and all the Troops returned to the Army, which engaged to remain in the same Situation till the Viceroy should have finished his Negotiations at Mantoua, where Goritz was already arrived. When that Prelate passed through the Veronese, the French who lay in Garrison at Lignago, having

A. D. 1512. having refused many Offers from the Venetians surrendered that Town to him, which they could no longer hold, by Order, as it was supposed, from Palisse, who gave the same Directions to the Garrisons of the other Towns, with a View to foment the Differences between Cæsar and the Venetians. But the Garrison of Lignago, tho' provided with a Pass from Goritz, had the Misfortune to be plundered by the Venetian Army which lay encamped before Brescia, whither they had returned from Bosco, after they had without Difficulty recovered Bergamo; but they forbore to besiege the Town, being prohibited, as it was said, by the Cardinal of Sion.

Resolutions of the Congress at Mantoua.

IN the Congress at Mantoua it was resolved that Massimiliano Sforza should be put in Possession of the Duchy of Milan, agreeably to the ardent Desire of the People, the Concession of Cæsar and the King of Aragon, and the constant Intentions of the Pope and the Swiss; and that the Time should be fixed by the Pope with Goritz, who was to go to Rome, and treat with his his Holiness of confirming the Friendship A. D. between him and Cæsar, and of making 1512. an Agreement between Cæsar and the Venetians, that by means of one common Union the Peace of Italy might be secured from any future Disturbances by the French.

IN the same Assembly came under Debate an Undertaking against the Flo- Restoration of the rentines, which was solicited by Giuliano Medici de' Medici in his own Name and that of solicited. the Cardinal. A Revolution, he supposed, might be easily effected in that State thro' the Divisions of the Citizens, many of whom desired their Return; and by a private Intelligence which, he said, they maintained with some noble and powerful Personages; and because the Florentines, having Part of their Men at Arms dispersed in Lombardy, and the rest confined in Brescia, had not a Force sufficient to defend themselves against any sudden Attack. He laid before the Assembly the Consequence which, besides the Money offered, would result from their Restoration, which would be, the Taking the Power

A. D. 1512. Power of Florence out of the Hands of one who intirely depended on the King of France, and committing it to the Management of Persons who, being injured and abused by that King, would acknowledge no other Dependence and Alliance but that of the Confederates. He was seconded in the Name of the Pope by Bernardo da Bibbiena, afterwards a Cardinal, who was deputed by the Pope for this very Purpose, and had been educated with his Brothers from their Childhood in the Family of the Medici.

At the Congress was sent to the Bishop of Geritz, Giovann Vittorio Soderini, Ambassador of Florence, a Lawyer, and Brother to the Gonfaloniere; but nothing was said to him, or demanded of him, by the Viceroy, or in the Name of the League. The Bishop only represented to him the Danger, and advised him to agree with Cæsar by complying with his first Demand, on which Condition he offered that Cæsar and the King of Aragon should take the Florentines under their Protection. But the Ambassador, having no Authority

to conclude an Agreement, could only A. D. make his Report to the Republic, and ex- 1512. pect their Answer, while in the mean time he, neither by himself nor by others, made any Applications to the Viceroy, nor used any other Means to frustrate the Proposals of the Medici. The Enterprize was however attended with many Difficulties in itself; for the Viceroy's Army was not so strong as to induce him to try its Force without Necessity; and Goritz, to prevent the Venetians from recovering Brescia, or making any further Progress, was desirous that the Spaniards should march with all possible Speed into Lombardy. It was believed therefore that if the Florentines had laid aside their nig- III Parfigardly chaffering about the Price, as the mony of imminent Danger required, and consented the Flo-to give to Cæsar the Money he had de- rentines. manded, and made a Present of a handsome Sum to the Viceroy, who was in extreme Necessity, they might easily have diverted the Storm; and that Goritz and the Viceroy would perhaps have been more forward to come to an Agreement with the Florentines, who, they were sure, would

A. D. 1512. would be careful to discharge their Obligations, than with the Medici, who had nothing to give them before they were restored by the Force of Arms to Florence. But, either through Carelessness, or the Malignity of Men, the Cause of that City being in a manner wholly abandoned, it was resolved that the Spanish Army, attended by the Cardinal and Giuliano de' Medici, should turn their March towards Florence; and that the Cardinal, whom the Pope in this Expedition had declared Legate of Tuscany, should call to his Assistance the Soldiers of the Church, and those of the neighbouring Towns whom he thought fit for his Purpose.

rentines.

THE Business of the Congress being dispatched, the Viceroy returned into the Bolognese, and immediately put his Troops in Motion against the Florentines, who having not been before apprised of what was resolved at Mantoua, had very little Time to make the necessary Provisions for their Defence. The Viceroy near the Frontiers was joined by the Cardinal, who had brought with him from Bologna

two

the Spaniards were quite unprovided. 1512.

The Cardinal came attended by Franciotto Orfino, and the Vitelli, Commanders of the Church ; but without their Regiments, which, with the other Troops of the Church, were stopped by the Duke of Urbino, who, tho' he had maintained Giuliano de' Medici some Years in his Court, and had always professed to desire the Advancement of his Family, yet, whatever might now be the Reason, had denied to accommodate the Army with Artillery, or Assistance of any kind from his Soldiers or Subjects, disregarding the Pope's Orders, signified both to him and to his Subjects of the neighbouring Towns of the Church, by ample Briefs, to assist them.

THE Viceroy was no sooner entered the Florentine Dominions than he was met by an Ambassador of the Republic, who, after representing to that General the great Respect which the Florentines had always paid to the King of Aragon, and their unblameable Behaviour in this last War, and what Advantages the King

 might expect from receiving them into his Friendship, intreated him, that before he proceeded any further, he would please to signify what he required of them, since they were ready to satisfy all reasonable Demands as far as lay in their Power. The Viceroy answered, that his Coming was in Pursuance of a Resolution taken, not only by the Catholic King, but by all the Confederates, for the common Security of Italy, considering that, while the Gonfaloniere remained at the Head of the Administration in their City, they could not assure themselves that the Republic would not, on some Occasion or other, declare for the King of France. Wherefore he demanded, in the Name of all the Confederates, that the Gonfaloniere should be deprived of his Office, and that such a Form of Government should be established as would not give Occasion of Umbrage to the allied Powers, which could not be effected without restoring the Cardinal and Giuliano de' Medici to their Country. If these Demands, he said, were satisfied, any other Matters in Dispute might be easily accommodated; and that that he might return and make his Report, A. D. 1512. or by some other Way acquaint his Masters with the Intentions of the General, who in the mean time would not stop his March in Expectation of an Answer.

ON Advice that the Spaniards were Florentines on full march for Florence, where it was alarmed. believed that the Forces of the Pope were to fall upon it from another Quarter, the Government was in the greatest Consternation, being under terrible Apprehensions also from the Divisions among the Citizens, and the Inclinations of Multitudes to a Change. They had but few Men at Arms, and no Foot, but such as were levied in Haste, or chosen from the Militia, the greater Part of whom had no Experience in War ; no General of Note for Valour or Authority, on whom they could depend ; and as for the inferior Officers, they were never worse served in the Memory of Man.
 They were careful however to make the best Provisions that the Shortness of Time would permit, by assembling their Men at Arms, who were dispersed into various Places, and lifting

 1512. Foot, such as could be had, and selecting the most serviceable Companies of the Militia. They reduced their whole Force to Florence, for the Security of the City, and to be at Hand for the Defence of those Places which the Enemy might threaten to attack. They were not also wanting, tho' late, to attempt an Accommodation; for, besides their continual treating by their Ambassador with the Viceroy *, they wrote to the Cardinal of Volterra, who was at Gradoli in the Territory of Rome, to wait upon his Holiness, and endeavour, by Offers, by Prayers, and every winning Art, to mollify his Resentment. But the Pontiff, hardened more than ever, answered in Words contradictory to his Actions, that this Enterprize was none of his, and that his Troops had no Share in it; but, that he might not give Offence to the whole League, he had been constrained to consent to it, and to give Liberty to the Cardinal de' Medici to

* Promising him and his Soldiers Presents and great Pay, and that their City should have the same Friends as the confederate Kings should think proper for them to chuse. Giovio to convey the Artillery from Bologna: A. D.

1512.
That he had it not in his Power to obviate the Expedition before it begun, much less to put a Stop to it afterwards.

THE Viceroy in the mean time was descended from the Mountains to Barberino, a Town fifteen Miles distant from Florence, whence he sent a Message to signify that it was not the Intention of the League to make any Alteration in the Government or Liberty of the City, but only to remove the Gonfaloniere from the Magistracy for the Security of Italy: The Confederates desired also that the Medici should enjoy their Country, not as Heads of the Government, but as private Persons, living under Subjection to the Laws and to the Magistracy in all Things conformably to the other Citizens.

WHEN these Proposals were published through the City various were the Opinions of Men, according to the Difference of their Judgments, Passions, and Fears. Some blamed the Measures of those who were for exposing the whole Body of Citizens

to so great a Danger merely out of Regard to a single Person, considering that by deposing him from the Magistracy the popular Councils and the Public Liberty would not be affected, but might also be easily preserved from being violated by the Medici, if, while they were divested of Reputation and Means, they should offer to exceed the Bounds of a private Station. It ought to be considered, they said, by what Means it was possible for the City to resist the Forces and Authority of so formidable a League; of itself it was insufficient, all Italy was against them, and there were not the least Hopes of Relief from the French, who having basely abandoned Italy were employed in defending their own Kingdom, and conscious of their own Weakness had answered to the Demands of the Florentines, that they were content they should make an Agreement with the League. Others on the contrary reasoned that it was ridiculous to imagine that so considerable a Movement had been made only out of Hatred to the Gonfaloniere, or that the Medici might have Liberty berty to live in Florence as private Citizens. <sup>A. D.</sup> No, very different were the Intentions of <sup>1512.</sup> the Confederates, who had no other End in View than to establish the Medici in a Tyranny, that they might have the City at their Command, and be able to extort from it a prodigious Sum of Money: That they disguised their Intentions under less rigorous Demands, which however were of the same Import. For what else could be the Meaning of removing, by Menaces and Terror of Arms, the Gonfaloniere at this Time from the Palace, but to leave the Flock to wander without a Shepherd?

 Or what else can signify the Entry of the Medici amidst so great a Tumult into Florence, than erecting a Standard under which may resort all those who have no other Design than to destroy the Name, the Memory, and the very Footsteps of the Great Council, the Abolition of which will be the Abolition of Liberty? And how is it possible to prevent the Medici, attended by a Spanish Army without, and followed by a Multitude of ambitious and seditious Citizens within, from seizing on our Liberties on the same Day that C 3 they

A. D. they shall enter Florence? It is our Duty 1512.  to consider the Consequences that might possibly arise from the Beginnings of Things, and from our once giving way to unjust and pernicious Demands. Nor ought we to be under such terrible Apprehensions of Danger as to be unmindful of the Preservation of the City, and how bitter it will be for one who was born and bred in Liberty to spend his Days in Slavery. Let it be remembered with what a generous Ardor for the Preservation of their Liberty our Citizens opposed Charles King of France when he was in Florence with so powerful an Army, and let us consider how much easier it will be to resist so small a Number in want of Money, without Provision of Victuals, with few Pieces of Artillery, and without any Means for supporting a War, if we defend ourselves from their first Assault. They will be under a Necessity to remove in a short Time out of Tuscany, and as they put themselves in Motion on the Hopes given them by the Exiles of obtaining an easy Conquest by one single Attack, when they shall once meet with a vigorous Resistance, they

they will be glad to come to an Agreement A. D. 1512. on very honourable Conditions on our Side. Such were the Discourses and Arguments used in Circles and in public Places; but the Gonfaloniere chusing that the Answer given to the Messenger of the Viceroy should be in Concert with the People themselves, convoked the Great Council, where before a full Assembly of the Citizens he made a Speech to this Effect.

“ HAD I believed, my worthy Fellow-Citizens, that the Demand of the Viceroy was levelled only at myself, and had concerned only my own Interest, I should of my own Motion have taken that Resolution which would have been conformable to the Ends I have in View. And as these have always kept me ready to expose my Life for your Welfare, it would have been much the easier for me to abdicate the Magistracy which you have conferred upon me, that you might be delivered from the Losses and Dangers of War, especially considering that during so many Years in which I have held this high

Station,

A. D. Station, my bodily Frame and Spirits have 1512. been exhausted and worn out by the continual Troubles and Fatigues. But since this Demand may possibly import more than what concerns my private Interest, it has been thought proper by these my honourable Colleagues and by myself, that concerning an Affair, in which the Interest of every Individual is so nearly interested, no Resolution should be taken but by public Consent; and that a Business of so weighty and universal Concern should not be debated by the ordinary Number of Citizens who have usually the Cognizance of other Matters, but by you, in whom is vested the Sovereign Power of this City, and to whom alone belong Consultations of such vast Importance. For my own Part, I will not persuade you to chuse one Side more than the other, be yours the Counsel, yours the Judgment, whatever you determine shall be accepted and approved by me, who now here lay before you not only the Magistracy, which is yours, but my Person, and my own Life, and should esteem it a singular Happiness if I could believe that this would be the Means of your Preservation. Examine how much the Demand of the Viceroy concerns your Liberty, and may God give you Grace to illuminate your Understanding, and cause you to make Choice of the better Part. If the Medici had an Inclination to live in this City as private Citizens, in due Subjection to the Ordinances of the Magistrates and of your Laws, their Restoration would be a laudable Action, since it would be the uniting the Members of one common Country into one common Body. But if they harbour other Designs, look well to yourselves, and beware of the Danger, and think it not too much to sustain any Costs or Difficulties to preserve your Liberty, the inestimable Value of which you will know better, but to no Purpose, when, I speak it with Horror! you shall be deprived of it. Let not any Person persuade himself that the Government of the Medici will be exercised in the same Manner as before their Expulsion, for the Form and Foundations of Things are now changed. At that Time being bred amongst us they were by Custom become

A. D. in a manner as familiar to us as private 1512. Citizens, and being possessed of vast Estates in proportion to their high Dignity, and affronted by none, they laid the Foundation of their Greatness in the Affections of the Citizens, with the principal of whom they consulted in public Affairs, and endeavoured, under the Cloak of Civility, rather to disguise than to display their Grandeur. But now since they have lived so many Years out of Florence, bred up in strange Customs, and consequently of small Insight into our civil Affairs, mindful of their Exile, and of the Severities used towards them, very indigent, affronted by so many Families, and conscious that the greater Part of the People, and even in a manner the whole City, detests and abhors a Tyranny, they will have no Consideration for any Citizen, but, constrained by Poverty and Suspicion, will assume and engross the Direction of all Affairs to themselves, establishing their Administration not on the Foundations of Love and Benevolence, but on those of Fear and Force of Arms, in such a Manner that this City will in a very short time be-become like Bologna when under the A. D. Bentivogli, or like Siena and Perugia. I <sup>1512.</sup> was willing to speak this in particular to those who extol the Times and Administration of Lorenzo de' Medici, under whom tho' Circumstances were hard, and there was really a Tyranny, but milder than many others, yet the Days of his Government, in comparison of what we may expect from the Return of his Family, may be called a Golden Age. It is your Part now, my Fellow-Citizens, to take a prudent Resolution; mine, with a constant and most joyful Heart, to resign this envied Magistracy, or, if you should resolve otherwise, with all Alacrity to attend to the Defence and Preservation of your Liberty."

NONE doubted what would be the Resolution of the Council, from the Inclination of almost all the People to maintain the popular Government. It was therefore with wonderful Unanimity resolved to consent to the Return of the Medici as private Citizens, but to refuse the Removal of the Gonfaloniere from the Magi-

A. D. Magistracy, and that if the Enemy should 1512. obstinately persist in demanding the last, they would freely expose their Lives and Fortunes in the Defence of their common Liberty and Country. All Hands were then set to work on Preparations for War, and Provision was made for Supplies of Money; Troops were ordered to Prato, a Town distant ten Miles from Florence, which, it was supposed, would be the first the Viceroy would attack.

THE Viceroy assembled his Troops with the Artillery at Barberino, from whence he marched with Difficulty over the rugged Appennine, because for Want of Money he was but ill provided with Pioneers and Instruments for clearing the Roads. He directed his March, as it was expected, to Prato, where arriving early in the Morning, he erected a Battery the same Day, from whence he play'd for some Hours with Falconets on the Gate Mercatale, but to no Effect, because it had a good Rampart within. The Flo- rentines had put into Prato Two Thousand Foot, almost all of them of the Militia, and the rest raised in Haste among all Sorts of Artificers, and People of the meanest Callings, so that there were very few, in so great a Number, of any Experience in War. There were besides One Hundred Men at Arms under Luca Savello, an old Officer, but neither by his Age nor Experience arrived to any Degree of military Knowledge; and the Men at Arms were the same as had a little before been disarmed and stripped in Lombardy. To this it must be added, that, from the Shortness of Time, and the Unskilfulness of the Person who had the Charge of providing the Place, there was a good Quantity of Artillery, but a Scarcity of Ammunition, and of all Things necessary for the Defence of the Town. The Viceroy had Two Hundred Men at Arms, and Five Thousand Spanish Foot, and only Two Cannon: An Army inconsiderable in respect of Number and other Provisions of War, but very considerable with regard to their Goodness; for the Foot were all of the same Infantry that had, so highly to their Honour, saved themselves at the Battle of Ravenna, and now, like military Men,

A. D.

A. D. Men, reposing great Confidence in their <sup>1512.</sup> own Valour, they utterly despised the Unskilfulness of their Adversaries. But as they were come unprovided of Victuals, and found no Plenty of them in the Country, for, tho' Harvest was hardly over, the Corn had been conveyed into fortified Places, they soon began to feel the Want of Necessaries for Subsistence.
The Viceroy, extremely uneasy in this Situation, was inclined to come to an Agreement, which was continually under Negotiation, on condition that, the Flo- rentines consenting to the Return of the Medici on an equal Footing with the other Citizens, no more should be said about deposing the Gonfaloniere ; but that they should pay the Viceroy, that he might depart out of their Dominions, a certain Sum of Money, which, it was supposed, would not exceed Thirty Thousand Ducats. With this Design the Viceroy had consented to grant a Pass for the Ambassadors appointed to conclude a Peace with him, and would have desisted from carrying on the Attack of Prato till their Arrival, provided that in the mean time he

he were supplied with Provisions from the A. D.
 Place. Nothing in Being has swifter <sup>1512.</sup> Wings than Opportunity, nothing is more dangerous than to judge from the Professions of others, and nothing is more prejudicial than an immoderate Suspicion.
 All the principal Citizens were desirous of an Accommodation, being accustomed, after the Example of their Ancestors, to defend their Liberties from Steel by Gold.
 They were pressing therefore that the Ambassadors appointed should immediately set out, and should be charged, among other Affairs, to take care that the Spanish Army might be supplied with Victuals from Prato, that so the Viceroy might patiently wait to see whether the Agreement under Consideration would take Effect. But the Gonfaloniere, either persuading himself, contrary to his natural Timidity, that the Enemies in Despair of Victory would of themselves depart, or dreading the Return of the Medici, in whatever Manner, to Florence, or impelled by Fate to be the Cause of his own Ruin and of the Calamities of his Country, artfully delayed the Setting out of the Ambassadors in so effectual

A. D. effectual a Manner that they did not go 1512. on the Day appointed by a Resolution.
The Viceroy therefore labouring under a Scarcity of Provisions, and uncertain whether the Ambassadors would come at all, the next Night removed his Camp from the Gate Mercatale to the Gate called Seraglio, which leads towards the Mountain. Here he planted his two Cannon, and began to batter the Wall near that Gate, chusing that Place because there was a high Terrass adjoining to the Wall, from whence it would be easy to mount any Breach made by battering the Wall above it. But the Facility on the Outside became a Difficulty on the Inside, for the Breach which was made above the Terrass was still very high above the Ground on the Inside. One of the Cannon burst at the first Shot, and the other, with which only they continued to batter, had its Force so diminished by often Firing, that the Strokes came but weak, and did little Execution; for after a Battery of many Hours they had made an Opening of no more than Twelve Braces. On this however some Spanish Foot got upon the Terrass, rafs, from whence they mounted the A. D.

 Breach, and fo to the Top of the Wall, <sup>1512.</sup> where they killed two Soldiers of the Guard, at whose Slaughter the reft began <sup>Prato</sup> to retire. But the Spaniards now ascend- <sup>taken and</sup> ed in Numbers by Ladders, and tho' there <sup>sacked by</sup>
 was posted near the Wall on the Infide a Battalion of Foot, provided with Pikes and Fire-arms, who were ordered to prevent the Enemy from lodging themfelves on the Wall, and to difpatch any that fhould be fo rafh as to leap down, or in any other manner defcend on the Infide, yet at the firft Sight of the Enemy upon the Walls, they abandoned their Defence, and without ftriking a Blow betook themfelves to Flight. The Spaniards, aftonifhed that fuch great Cowardice and little Experience fhould be found amongft military Men, entered the Place at feveral Quarters without Oppofition, and began to run through the Streets, where was no more Refiftance, but only Flight, Shrieks, Violence, Rapine, Blood, and Slaughters, the Florentine Foot throwing down their Arms, and furrendering to the Mercy of the Conquerors, from whose Avarice, VOL. VI, D Lust,

A. D. 1512. Lust, and Cruelty nothing would have been safe, if the Cardinal de' Medici had not placed a Guard at the great Church, and so preserved the Chastity of the Women, who were almost all of them fled thither for Refuge*. There perished, not in fighting, for none had the Heart to fight, but in flying, or in begging for Quarter, above Two Thousand Men, and all the rest, with the Florentine Commissary, were made Prisoners. After the Loss of Prato the Pistoiese, without withdrawing their Obedience to the Florentines in other Affairs, took upon them to agree with the Viceroy for supplying his Army with Provisions, on receiving his Promise that they should not be molested.

THIS sad Disaster, which caused the Ambassadors who were going to the Viceroy to stop in the Midst of their Journey, and return back, was no sooner known in Florence than it produced a vast Alteration * Buonacorsi says that neither Virgins, Children, nor consecrated Places were spared; and Giovio writes that the Cruelty of the Spaniards exceeded that of the Germans and French in the Pillage of Brescia, and that there were killed above Five Thousand unarmed Men.

THE WARS IN ITALY. 51

tion in the Minds of the People. The A. D.
1512.
 Gonfaloniere repenting the Folly of his Counsel, terrified, and in a manner deprived at once of all Esteem and Authority, rather led than a Leader, and quite irresolute, suffered himself to be subservient to the Will of others, without making the least Provision for his own Preservation or the public Safety. Others who were desirous of a Change of Government grew audacious, and publicly condemned the present Administration. But the greater Part of the Citizens unused to Arms, and having before their Eyes the Example of Prato, tho' they were fond of a popular Government, stood exposed by their Fears as a Prey to any who had a Mind to invade them. This Situation of Affairs increased the Audaciousness of Pagolo Vettori and Antonfrancesco de gli Albizi, young Noblemen, seditious, and desirous of Novelties, who, having some Months before secretly conspired with some others in favour of the Medici, and, in order to settle with them the Method by which they might be restored, held a private Conference at a Coun-

A. D. try Seat, in the Florentine Dominions, on 1512. the Borders of the Senese, with Giulio de' Medici, resolved to make an Attempt to force the Gonfaloniere out of the public Palace. And communicating their Design to Bartolomeo Valori, a young Man of the same Quality, and by his Prodigality overwhelmed with Debts, as was also Pagolo, on the Morning of the second Day after the Loss of Prato, which was the last of August, they entered with a few Attendants into the Palace, where they found no Provision made for Resistance, because the Gonfaloniere had abandoned himself to the Disposal of Chance or Fortune. They proceeded then directly to the Chamber of that Magistrate, and threatened to kill him if he did not leave the Palace; but if he would comply, they gave him their Word of Honour that his Person should be safe. The Gonfalo- niere submitting, and the City taking Alarm at the Tumult, there appeared many against him, but not a single Person in his Favour: On which the Associates in the Conspiracy gave Orders for immediately assembling the Magistrates, to whom whom the Laws have given a very ample <sup>A. D.</sup> Authority over the Gonfalonieres, and de- <sup>1512.</sup> demanded that he might be deprived of his Office by Law, threatening otherwise to deprive him of his Life. The Fear of this induced the Magistrates, against their Will, to depose him; after which they conducted him in Safety to the House of Pagolo, from whence the next Night he set out well attended for the Territory of the Senese, and from thence, pretending to go to Rome under a Pass obtained from the Pontiff, he privately took the Road to Ancona, and passed by Sea to Ragusa. For he had been informed, by means of the Cardinal his Brother, that the Pope, either out of Malice, or a covetous Desire to deprive him of his Money, of which it was reported that he had a large Sum, intended to break his Word.

AFTER the Gonfaloniere had been deposed from the Magistracy the City of Florence immediately sent Ambassadors to the Viceroy, with whom, by Means of the Cardinal de' Medici they easily came to an Accommodation. For the Cardinal was content that nothing should be mentioned concerning his private Interests, but the Restitution of his Family and of all their Adherents to their own Country as private Citizens, with a Power to redeem within a certain Time the confiscated Estates, indemnifying those to whom they were transferred for the Money they had ments. As to the public Affairs the Flo- rentines entered into the League, and obliged themselves to pay unto Cæsar Forty Thousand Ducats in consequence of what the Medici, in answer to the Demand of Goritz at Mantoua, had promised as a Reward for their Restoration; to pay the Viceroy for the Use of the Army Eighty Thousand Ducats, Half at present, and the Remainder within Two Months; and for himself Twenty Thousand Ducats: On the Receipt of the first Payment the Viceroy was immediately to march out of the Dominions of the Florentines, evacuating all the Places of which he had taken Possession. Besides they made a League with the King of Aragon, under reciprocal Obligations of assisting each other

other with a certain Number of Men at Arms for the Defence of their States, and that the Florentines should take into their Pay Two Hundred Men at Arms of the Subjects of that King, the Command of which, tho' not expressed, was designed for the Marquis della Palude, to whom the Cardinal had promised, or at least given Hopes, that he should be constituted Captain General of the Florentine Forces.

THE Gonfaloniere being expelled, and the Dangers of War removed by an Agreement, the Citizens applied themselves to reform the Government in those Points in which the former Model had been judged to be of no Service; but with an universal Intention, except of a very few, and those either young Men, or almost all of them scarce worthy of Notice, to preserve their Liberty and the popular Council. For this End they enacted, by new Laws, that the Gonfaloniere should no more be elected for Perpetuity, but only for one Year: That to the Council of Eighteen, which was changed every Six Months, and by whose Authority the

Florentines alter their Government.

A. D. 1512. most weighty Affairs were determined, should be added for Perpetuity all those who had, to that Day, discharged the great Offices of the State either at Home or Abroad, with an Intent that the Citizens of the greatest Quality might always assist at their Debates; at Home particularly such as had either been Gonfalonieres of Justice, or of the Number of the Ten of the Balia, a Magistracy of great Authority in that Republic; of such as had served abroad, all those who being elected by the Council of Eighty had been sent Ambassadors to Princes, or had been Commissaries general in War. In all other Points the Ordinances of the same Government remained in Force without Alteration.

THESE Affairs being settled, Giovan Battista Ridolfi, a noble Citizen, and of great Reputation for Prudence, was elected Gonfaloniere for the first Year, the People, as is usually the Case in troublesome Times, not paying so much Regard to those who were most acceptable to them for their popular Arts, as to a Person who
by

by his great Authority in the City, especially with the Nobility, and by his own <sup>A. D. 1512.</sup> extraordinary Talents was best capable of establishing the tottering State of the Commonwealth. But Things were now gone too far, and the Enemies of the public Liberty were become too powerful ; in the Bowels of the Country was a suspected Army, and within the City the most audacious of the Youth were greatly desirous of oppressing that Liberty. With them concurred in Will, tho' in Words he pretended the contrary, the Cardinal de' Medici ; for even from the Beginning he would not have thought the Restoration of his Family merely as private Citizens a Reward worthy of such great Fatigues, and now he considered further that their present Situation would not be durable, because they would be universally detested by the People, and himself in particular, on a Suspicion that he would be continually inciting the other Citizens to conspire against their Liberty, but much more from an Indignation conceived against the Family for having conducted a Spanish Army against their Country, and being

A. D. 1512. the Cause of the most barbarous and cruel Saccage of Prato, and that the City was constrained by the Terror of Arms to submit to dishonourable and unjust Conditions. The Cardinal was stimulated to the same Purpose by those who had before conspired with him, and had no honourable Station in the well regulated Commonwealth. But it was necessary to have the Consent of the Viceroy, who still lay with his Army in Prato expecting the first Payment, which the Circumstances of the City rendered difficult to get in readiness, and had no Inclination, whatever Cause might be pretended, to favour a new Alteration in the City. But on the Representations of the Cardinal, who had procured himself to be seconded by the Marquis della Palude, and Andrea Caraffa, Count di Santa Severina, Generals in the Army, that it was to be feared lest the City, to whom the Name of the Spaniards could not but be henceforth perfectly odious on account of the Damages it had received from them, and which would therefore on all Occasions adhere to the Enemies of the Catholic King, should, should, as soon as the Army had quitted <sup>A. D.</sup> their Dominions, recall the Gonfaloniere, <sup>1512.</sup> whom it had been forced to expel, he complied with the Desires of his Eminence, being the rather induced by the great Difficulty the Citizens made of paying him the Money they had promised; in which, had they been more expeditious, they would have laid a greater Foundation for a free Government. The Cardinal therefore having previously settled Matters with the Viceroy, unexpectedly entered Florence, and repaired to the Houses of the Medici. There entered <sup>Medici</sup> also, Part with him and Part separately, <sup>return to</sup> Florence. a good Number of Italian Officers and Soldiers, the Magistrates not daring to forbid their Entrance on account of the Neighbourhood of the Spanish Army. The next Day a great Number of Citizens being assembled in Council in the public Palace on the present Juncture, and Giuliano de' Medici assisting, the Soldiers on a sudden forced the Gate, and rushing up Stairs took Possession of the Palace, and seized on the Plate which was kept there for the Use of the Magistracy. The

A. D. 1512. Magistrates then with the Gonfaloniere being forced to submit to the Will of a Man who could do more with Arms than they could do by their unarmed Reverence and Authority, immediately at the Motion of Giuliano de' Medici, called, by Sound of the great Bell, an Assembly of the People in the Square of the Palace. Here those that met, finding themselves furrounded by armed Soldiers, and the Youth of the City that had taken Arms for the Medici, gave their Consent that about Fifty Citizens, nominated with the Approbation of the Cardinal, should be invested with the same Authority in public Affairs as had resided in all the People, which so ample a Power the Florentines call Balia *. By a Decree of this Assembly the Government was reduced to that Form in which it subsisted before the Year 1494, a Guard was stationed at the Palace, and the Medici resumed their former Grandeur, but governed more im-

Giovio, in his Life of Pope Leo X. says that Fifteen Men were created with a Power to elect Sixty others of the best Esteem in the City, and most attached to the Medici, who with their Electors were to constitute a perpetual or standing Council for the Government of the State.

imperiously, and with a more absolute Authority than their Father had done. A. D.

AFTER this Manner was the Liberty of the Florentines oppressed by Arms, being reduced to this Condition principally by the Divisions among the Citizens. And, to say nothing of the Neutrality which they had imprudently observed, and of the Remissness of the Gonfaloniere in suffering the Enemies of the popular Government to take too much Head, it is believed that this Revolution would not even after all have been effected, if the Cause of the Public had not been negligently managed. For the King of Aragon at first had not so great a Desire to subvert the Liberty of Florence, as to detach the City from its Adherence to the King of France, and to squeeze a Sum of Money from it to pay his Army. For as soon as the French had abandoned the Dutchy of Milan, he charged the Viceroy that when either the Circumstances of Affairs called him on some other Enterprize, or that for any other Reason he should perceive that the Restoration of the Medici would be difficult

A. D. 1512. cult to accomplish, he should then take his Measures according to the Times, and agree or not with the City, as he saw most convenient. Such were his Orders at first ; but afterwards being dissatisfied with the Pope for what he had attempted against Alfonso d'Esle at Rome, and taking Umbrage at the Threats which his Holiness threw out in public against the Name of the Barbarians, he openly declared his Mind to the same Florentine Ambassador that had been sent to him at the Beginning of the War, and accordingly charged the Viceroy to attempt no Alteration in the Government, either because he judged it safer to preserve the Gonfaloniere who was obnoxious to the Pope, or was apprehensive that the Cardinal de' Medici after his Restoration would have a greater Dependance on the Pope than himself. But this last Resolution did not come to the Knowledge of the Viceroy, till the Day after the Republic was reduced under the Power of the Cardinal.

By what has been said it appears that if the Florentines, after the Expulsion of the French,

French, had been diligent in providing for A. D. the Security of their Affairs by means of <sup>1512.</sup> an Harmony among themselves, or had been guarded by a Body of well disciplined and experienced Troops, the Viceroy would either not have put himself in Motion against them, or have met with such Difficulties in his Attempt to oppress them, that he would have been glad to compound with them for a Sum of Money. But it was decreed that they should take none of these salutary Measures; since, besides what might be comprehended by human Reasoning and Foresight, they had been warned from Heaven of the imminent Dangers. For not long before a Thunderbolt fell on the Gate by which you go <sup>Signs</sup> from Florence to Prato, and struck off <sup>prognostic</sup> from an antient Escutcheon of Marble the <sup>of the Re-</sup> golden Flower-de-Luces, which are the <sup>volution.</sup> Ensign of the King of France. Another falling on the Top of the Palace penetrated into the Chamber of the Gonfaloniere, and touching only the large Silver Box that contains the Balls used in electing the chief Magistrate, descended to the Bottom, where it struck a great Stone that was at

A. D. 1512. the Foot of the Stairs, and supported the Frame of the Building, in such a Manner that, being forced out of its Place without receiving any Damage, it seemed to be removed by some very dextrous and skilful Architect.

Castellet-to of Genoa surrendered. AT the same time, or a little before, the Castelletto of Genoa, which had been battered by some Cannon lent by the Pope, was surrendered to the Genoese on the Payment of Ten Thousand Ducats to the Governor, who despaired of Relief because a Fleet, sent by the King from Provence to attend to the Defence of that City before he knew of its Rebellion, was returned back without daring to put to Shore. But the Lantern still held out for the King, having about the same time received a Supply of Provisions and other Necessaries by some French Ships.

THE Affairs of Florence being settled, and the promised Money received, the Viceroy put his Army in Motion for Brescia, which City the Venetian Army, after mollifying the refractory Temper of the the Swiss, was employed in besieging. A. D. 1512.

 They lay before the Gate of San Giovanni, and battered the Town, and at the same time, with some Pieces of Artillery planted on an opposite Hill, played on the Castle. They were also in hopes of being let into the Place by the Gate of the Pile by means of a Plot, which was discovered without taking Effect. But as soon as they were joined by the Spanish Army at the Castle of Gairo, near to Brescia, Aubigni, the Commander of the French who were in Garrison in the Town, chose to surrender it, together with the Castle, into the Hands of the Viceroy, on Condition that all the Soldiers should march out in Safety with their Effects, but with their Colours folded, their Pikes and Lances lowered, and leaving behind them their Artillery. It is suspected that Aubigni chose to surrender to the Viceroy rather than to the Venetians by the Orders of his King, by which he was directed to give up the Place to the Spaniards, or to Cæsar, not out of Hatred to the Venetians, but to suggest Matter of Contention between Cæsar and the King of Arragon. The same Step was

A. D. taken, before the Spaniards passed into 1512. Lombardy, by the French Garrison of Lignano, who despising the repeated Offers of the Venetians, put that Fortrefs into the Hands of the Bishop of Goritz, to whom also Peschiera was in like manner surrender'd at the same time that the Viceroy entered into Brescia, the Possession of which City also was demanded by the Bishop, but the Viceroy was pleased to keep it for the present for the Use of the League, in whose Name he had received it. But the Enterprize against Crema took a different Turn, for Renzo da Ceri with a Part of the Venetian Army lying before the Place, on the Approach of Four Thousand Swiss sent by Ottaviano Sforza, Bishop of Lodi, and Governor of Milan, to make the Conquest of it in the Name of Massimiliano Sforza, the future Duke, Benedetto Cribrario, corrupted with Gifts and a Promise of being created a Nobleman of Venice, surrendered the Town to the Venetians, with the Consent of Mons. di Duraso, who commanded in the Castle, and would not depend for his Safety on the Faith of the Swiss.

netians.

THE Bishop of Goritz after this took a Progreſs to Rome, where the Pope being extremely ſollicitous to gain his Affections forced his Nature, and cauſed him to be received through his whole Dominions with all imaginable Honours, defraying the Expences of him and all his Attendants during the whole Journey in a moſt ſumptuous Manner, and receiving him in all the Towns with exceſſive and even unuſual Marks of Honour. In many Places he was addreſſed by new Embaſſies of Prelates and honourable Perſons ſent by the Pope, who would have perſuaded the College of Cardinals to walk in Proceſſion and receive him at the Gate of Rome; but the College refuſing it, as a Step not only without Precedent but full of the higheſt Indignity, the Cardinals of Agen and Strigonia went forth as far as the Meadows half a Mile from the Gate to receive the Biſhop in the Name of the Pontiff, and conducted him, marching in the Middle between them, as Lieutenant of Cæſar, to the Church of Santa Maria del Popolo, from whence, after the two

A. D. Cardinals had taken their Leave of him, 1512. he was accompanied by an innumerable Multitude to the Presence of the Pontiff, who waited for him in a public Consistory, vested in his Robes, and seated in the pontifical Chair. With the same Formalities he had a few Days before very honourably received twelve Ambassadors of the Swiss, who were deputed from all the Cantons to pay their Obedience in a public Manner, and to offer the Service of the whole Nation for the perpetual Defence of the State of the Church, with their Thanks to his Holiness for the signal Honour he had done them in presenting them with the Sword, Cap, Helmet, and Standard, and bestowing on them the Title of Defenders of the Ecclesiastic Liberty.

ON the Arrival of Goritz a Council was held for settling the public Affairs on a solid Foundation, which could only be done by removing the Causes of Feuds and Contentions between particular Parties, that the Peace of Italy might be so firmly established, that all its Powers might with united Counsels and Resolutions resist the King of France. The most difficult Part <sup>A. D.</sup> of this Work was an Accommodation, so <sup>1512.</sup> often attempted, between Cæsar and the Venetian Senate: For Goritz consented that the Venetians should have the Possession of Padoua, Trevigi, Brescia, Bergamo and Crema, but insisted on the Restitution of Vicenza to the Emperor, and a Renunciation of all Right and Title to those Towns which Cæsar retained, besides the present Payment of Two Hundred Thousand Rhenish Florins, and a yearly Tribute of Thirty Thousand more for ever. The Venetians thought it hard to acknowledge themselves Tributaries for those Towns which they had held so many Years in Possession as their Property; harder to pay such a Sum of Money, though the Pope offered to lend them Part of it; but intolerable to restore Vicenza, which being in the Hands of the Emperor would, as they alledged, by dividing the Body of their State, cut off the Communication of the Head and other principal Parts with the rest of the Members, by which Means their Possession of Brescia, Bergamo and Crema would become very uncertain and precarius. Besides this, they represented, as a more decent Excuse for their Refusal, that they had passed their solemn Word to the Vicentines at their last Surrendry, that they would never suffer themselves to be separated from them.

Pope's
Demands
of the
Aragon.

SOME other Articles came under Debate between the Pope and the Ambassadors of the King of Aragon, which were proposed by one Party more with a View to countervail the Complaints of the other, than in Hopes to obtain Satisfaction, For the Pope demanded that the King should, according to the Stipulations of the Confederacy, assist him in the Conquest of Ferrara, and withdraw his Protection from Fabritio and Marc' Antonio Colonna, against whom his Holiness had begun to proceed with spiritual Arms, for having forced the Lateran Gate, and received Alfonso d'Esle his Rebel into the Towns the Dominion of which directly belonged to the Church. He demanded also that the King should renounce the Protections which he had granted in Tuscany to the Florentines, Senese, Lucchese, and to Piombino, as done in Diminution

Diminution of the Rights of the Empire, A. D. and giving Umbrage to Italy in general, <sup>1512.</sup> and particularly to the Church, since as it could not be of any Service to the other Potentates that he should have so many Adherents in Italy, so it would be very dangerous for the Church to have a Province adjoining to its Dominions dependent on his Authority.

THE Answer of the Spaniards to those Answer Demands was, that the King their Master of the did not refuse to assist his Holiness against King's Ferrara, provided that, according to the Ambassadors.
 Obligations of the former Confederacy, he paid the Sums due to the Army for the Time past, and provided for future Payments; that his Proceedings against Fa- britio and Marc' Antonio Colonna were by no means laudable; for by the Dependencies which they had contracted, and by the Reputation they had gained as Generals, the Prosecution of them would furnish Matter for new Combuſtions: That his Catholic Majesty could not abandon them without great Prejudice to his own Honour; and that the Exploits performed E 4 by

A. D. by both of them in the Service of the Pontiff, as well as of himself, in the War against the King of France, deserved a better Recompense: That the Complaint of the Protections of Tuscany did not arise from any just Umbrage or Jealousy, but was made with an Intent that Siena, Lucca and Piombino might be left as a Prey to the covetous Ambition of the Pontiff: That the King, however, as to these Points would refer himself to the Arbitration of the Emperor,

IT was the unanimous Desire of the Confederates that Massimiliano Sforza should be instated in the Dutchy of Milan, though Cæsar would not consent to grant him the Investiture, nor give him the Name of Duke or any Title of Jurisdiction. But there was revived a Complaint of Goritz and the Spaniards concerning the Seizure of Parma and Piacenza, in Prejudice of the Rights of the Empire, to the immoderate Increase of Power in the Popes, and too much weakening the Dutchy of Milan, which it would rather have been necessary to render more powerful, ful, because it was always sure to receive the first Impressions from the French. The Pontiff, it was said, had not in the Articles of the League mentioned any other Cities than Bologna and Ferrara; but now, under Pretence of Rights of which there appeared no authentic Traces in the Memory of Man, usurped what had not for a vast Space of Time been in the Possession of the Roman Church, nor was there any certain Knowledge that she had ever been possessed of it even in the most antient Times, for of Donations made by Emperors there was nothing to shew but one simple Writing, which might have been forged by any one at Pleasure; and yet the Pope, as if the Case were manifest and notorious, taking Advantage of the Troubles of Lombardy, had taken upon himself to judge in his own Cause.

ALL these Disputes were difficult to be terminated; but what by far occasioned the greatest Trouble and Disturbance was the Difference between Cæsar and the Venetians, the Pope fatiguing himself to the utmost utmost of his Power, sometimes by Exhortations, sometimes by Intreaties, and sometimes by Menaces, being desirous, as he was at first, of the Preservation of the Venetians for the public Good of Italy, for he hoped by their Assistance, without employing the Spaniards, to make himself Master of Ferrara. The Ambassadors of the King of Aragon also laboured for a Reconciliation, being apprehensive that the Venetians, to the common Danger, might be induced to turn their Thoughts once more on uniting with the King of France. But they were under a Necessity of acting cautiously for fear of provoking Cæsar to enter into an Alliance with France, from which their King had taken so much Pains to separate him, and because his Catholic Majesty for some other Reasons would by no means forfeit his Friendship. The Swiss Ambassadors also interposed their good Offices for adjusting these Differences; for they had obliged themselves to defend the Venetians on the yearly Pension of Twenty-five Thousand Ducats; and they desired not to be reduced to the Necessity either of violating their Promises, Promises, or of opposing Cæsar if he A. D. 1512. should attack the Venetian Dominions.

AT last, the Pontiff finding he could not induce Goritz to recede from his Demand of the Restitution of Vicenza, nor dispose the Venetians to give it up, and that they disagreed also about the Sum of Money, and desirous above all things that, in order to extinguish the Name and Authority of the Pisan Conventicle, the Emperor might approve of the Lateran Council, protested to the Venetian Ambassadors that he should be constrained to prosecute their Republic with spiritual and temporal Arms. But his Protest making no Impression on the Ambassadors, he entered into a Confederacy with Cæsar alone, for the Spanish Ambassador refused to be a Party concerned, either because he had no Commission from his Master, or because that King, though inclined to assist Cæsar, was yet sollicitous to find some Means for keeping alive the Hopes of the Venetians.*

Cæsar's
Part.

IN the Preamble to this Confederacy, which was afterwards solemnly published in the Church of Santa Maria del Popolo, it was expressed that the Venetians having obstinately refused Peace, and the Pontiff, obliged by the Necessities of the Christian Commonwealth, having protested to abandon them, Cæsar had entered into and accepted of the League made in the Year 1511 between the Pope, the King of Aragon, and the Venetians, by Virtue of the Liberty which had been hitherto reserved for his Accession; that he promised to adhere to the Lateran Council, disannulling the Mandate, and revoking all Powers and Acts made or granted in favour of the Pisan Conventicle; and that he was obliged not to assist any Subject or Enemy of the Church, particularly Alfonso d' Este and the Bentivogli, the Possessors of Ferrara and Bologna; and he was also to recall the German Foot that were in the Service of Alfonso and of Federigo da Bozzolo his Feudatory.

handsome Action to engage against the Venetians, who, according to Bembo, had deserved infinitely well of the Pope.

ON the other Part the Pope engaged to assist Cæsar with spiritual and temporal Arms against the Venetians, till he should have recovered all that was allotted him by the League of Cambray. The Venetians were declared to be wholly excluded from the League, and from the Truce made with Cæsar, because they had several Ways acted in Contravention to both; and to be Enemies to the Pontiff, to Cæsar, and to the Catholic King, to whom Room was reserved for entering into the Confederacy within a certain Time, and on certain Conditions: The Pope was to make no Agreement with the Venetians without the Consent of Cæsar, or before Cæsar had recovered all that belonged to him, as above: Neither the Pope nor Cæsar were at Liberty to enter into an Agreement with any Christian Prince without the Consent of the other Party: During the War against the Venetians the Pope was not to molest Fabritio or Marc' Antonio Colonna, reserving Liberty to proceed against the Bishop, Pompeo, Giulio, and some other declared Rebels: Lastly, that bassadors of the whole Swiss Nation, who were in Milan, were with Difficulty induced to wait the Arrival of the Bishop, for they were desirous that in the Ceremonies and Solemnities to be performed on that Occasion it should appear, by some Marks of Distinction, that the Swiss were the Cause of this happy Event, that they were the Men who had driven the French out of that State, the Men to whose Labour and Valour Massimiliano was indebted for receiving it. The Viceroy however prevailed on them, more by Cunning and Industry than by Authority, to wait the Coming of Goritz. That Prelate having in the Name of Cæsar ratified at Florence the Confederacy made in Prato, and received a certain Sum of Money from the Lucchese, for taking them under his Protection, proceeded to Cremona, where he was expected by Massimiliano Sforza and the Viceroy, and from thence they all set out together for Milan to make their Entry into that City, on the Day appointed, with the Solemnities and Honours usually attending new Princes. In the Cavalcade there was a great Dispute between the greatly endeared his Memory to the In-their Weariness and Vexations under fo-Hatred of the other into Benevolence; and before they had ended their Rejoicings the

A. D.

1512.

THE Confederacy made in Rome had not wholly broken off all Hopes of Accommodation between Cæsar and the Venetians, for the Pope had immediately sent to Venice Jacopo Staffileo his Nuncio, who was accompanied by three Ambassadors of the Swiss, in order to induce them to come to an Agreement. On the other Side the Senate, to preserve the Benevolence of the Pope, and to avoid giving Cæsar any Cause to employ his Arms against them, had directed their Ambassadors to profess their Adherence to the Lateran Council, and as soon as the Confederacy was made sent Orders for their Troops to retire into the Padouan. The Viceroy therefore, unwilling to disturb the Hopes of a Peace, had drawn off his Army towards Milan. But the same Difficulties concerning the Restitution of Vicenza, and the Payment of the Money still subsisting, all those Labours were to no Purpose. And this was the Reason why the Pope did not attack Ferrara, because had the Peace taken Effect, he would have been in Hopes that his own

A. D. Forces, with the Assistance of the Vene-

 were to be joined, if needful, by the Spaniards, were sufficient to secure him the Victory; but otherwise he had resolved to defer the Undertaking till the Spring, because Ferrara was thought difficult to be taken in the Winter, being strong by Situation with respect to the River, and Alfonso had strongly fortified it, and was continually adding some new Fortifications.

It may perhaps seem foreign to my Purpose, which was not to take any Notice of Occurrences happening without the Bounds of Italy, to give an Account of Transactions during the Course of this Year in France; but the Dependence of the State of Affairs in our own Country upon that on the other Side of the Mountains, and the Connexion of Events, so often observed, in one with the Resolutions and Events in the other, oblige me not to pass them quite over in Silence.---- ed in English and Spanish Ships to Fontarabia, a Town on the utmost Border of the Kingdom of Spain towards France, and seated on the Ocean. Here they were to be joined by the Spanish Forces, and, according to the Agreement made between the Father-in-law and Son-in-law, jointly attack the Dutchy of Guyenne, which, according to the antient Names and Divisions of Countries, is a Part of the Province of Aquitaine. Against this Invasion the King of France, not as yet secure on the Side of Picardy, had got in readiness a Regiment of Eight Hundred Lances, which he had formed on a new Establishment, and had listed a great Number of Foot in the lower Parts of Germany, not subject to Cæsar. And knowing how much more important it was for the Defence of the Dutchy of Guyenne to be secure of the Kingdom of Navarre, which being appropriated in Dowry to Catherine de Foix was enjoyed in common by herself and John her Son by her Husband Albert, he had invited Albert to his Court, and was very solicitous to gain him to his Interest. And he had a very fair Colour offered him for taking Possession of the Country by the Death of Gaston de Foix, on which Occasion the King of France pretending that Navarre did not belong to Females, but to himself as the next Heir male of the Family of Foix, had begun a Process at Law against John.

ON the other Side the Catholic King, who had set his Eyes on the Kingdom of Navarre, demanded of the King that he should stand neuter between him and the King of France, should grant a free Passage through Navarre to his Troops that were to enter France, and for the Security of observing such Engagements should put into his Hands some Fortresses, which he promised to restore as soon as the War was ended. The King of Navarre being sensible of the Tendency of these Demands, for he knew that the Kings of Spain had of old a longing Desire to seize on Navarre, chose rather to expose himself to an uncertain Danger, than to embrace certain Ruine, in Hopes that he should not fail of the Succours promised by the King of France, for whose Affairs it it would be very convenient to keep the War out of his own Dominions in Navarre. At the same time, either to give more Leisure to the Troops for marching, as appointed, to his Assistance, or to free himself, if possible, from these Demands, he treated with the King of Aragon, who, according to his Custom, proceeded in this Affair with profound Policy. But he was no more injured by the Diligence and Sollicitude of the Catholic King, than he was by the Negligence of the King of France, who taking Encouragement because the English who had been landed at Fontarabia had lain still in their Quarters for many Days, and being confident that the King of Navarre could for some Time defend himself with his own Forces, proceeded but slowly in sending him Succours. On this Occasion the King of Aragon, who had craftily amused Navarre with fallacious Hopes, turned his Forces that were prepared to join with the English, with the utmost Expedition, against the Dominions of that King, who being unprepared, and despairing of Reinto Bearn.

THUS the Kingdom of Navarre, except some garrisoned Fortresses which held out for the fugitive King, being abandoned, was without any Expence or Difficulty, and more from an Awe of the Neighbourhood of the English than by his own Forces, reduced under the Power of the King of Aragon. That Prince knowing himself incapable of asserting his Right to that Kingdom by any other Title, alledged that he had taken lawful Possession of it by Authority from the Apostolic See. For the Pope, not satisfied with his prosperous Successes in Italy, had a little before published a Bull against the King of France, in which, calling him no longer most Christian but most illustrious, he subjected him and all his Adherents to all the Punishments of Heretics and Schismatics, granting a Power to any one lawfully to seize on their Goods, Estates, and whatever else belonged to them. With the same bitter Spirit, being highly offended with the City of Lions for for receiving the Cardinals and the other A. D. Prelates who had fled from Milan, he had <sup>1512.</sup> commanded, under grievous Censures, that the Fair used to be kept four times a Year, with a vast Concourse of Merchants, at Lions, should be held for the future in the City of Geneva, from whence Lewis XI. had, for the Benefit of his Kingdom, removed it; and at last he subjected the whole Kingdom of France to the Ecclesiastic Interdict.

BUT the King of Aragon having got Possession of Navarre, a Kingdom, though of small Extent and Revenues, yet very commodious by its Situation, and a great Security to Spain, had firmly resolved to proceed no further, not thinking it for his Purpose to go to War with the King of France beyond the Mountains. Hence he had been but slow in preparing his Forces even from the first Landing of the English, and after his Acquisition of Navarre, when the English solicited him to join his Forces with theirs, that they might march in conjunction, and lay Siege to Bayonne, a City in the Neighbour-

But the English opposing his Schemes, and setting no Value on any Conquest in the Dutchy of Guyenne without Bayonne, after much Time spent in these Disputes, grew tired, and thinking themselves deluded, embarked without Orders or Leave from their Prince, and returned to England.

By their Departure the King of France remained secure on that Side, and he was no longer under Apprehensions from the English, who had attacked him by Sea, for he was become at length so powerful in his naval Armaments, that he commanded all the Ocean between the Coasts of England and Spain. He resolved therefore dom of France. The King of Aragon, at A. D. the Time when he gave Hopes to the <sup>1512.</sup> English that he would make War, had, in order to secure the whole Kingdom of Navarre, sent some Troops to St. Jean Pied de Port, a Town on the utmost Borders of Navarre, and seated at the Foot of the Pirenean Mountains towards France; and when afterwards the French Forces began to increase in the neighbouring Places, had sent thither Federigo Duke of Alva, his Captain General, with his whole Army. But at length being much inferior to the French, who were joined by the Dauphine, Charles Duke of Bour- bon, and Longueville, Lords of the first Quality, the Duke of Alva entrenched himself in a strong Post between the Plain and the Mountain, and judged that he should do enough if he could prevent the French from entering Navarre. The Enemy, being sensible that they could not hurt him in that Place because of the Strength of its Situation, resolved that the King of Navarre with Seven Thousand Foot of his own Country, accompanied by M. la Palisse with Three Hundred Lances, should

A. D. 1512. should march from Salvaterre near St. Jean Pied de Port, where the whole Army was encamped, and pass the Pirenean Mountains by the Way of Valdironcales, and approaching Pampelona, the Capital of Navarre, in which the People, taking Encouragement from the near Approach of the French, began already to be very tumultuous, from a Desire after their King, should seize the Pass of Roncivalle, by which alone Provisions were conveyed to the Spanish Camp, which in its present Situation, by means of the Barrenness of the Country, did not abound with Victuals. The Event was, that, after the King of Navarre and Palisse had seized a Pass on the Summit of the Pirenean Mountains, they took by Storm Borghetto, a Town seated at the Foot of those Mountains, and defended by Baldes, a Captain in the King of Aragon's Guards, with a considerable Number of Foot. And if they had hastened with due Expedition to seize the Pass of Roncivalle, Hunger alone would have been sufficient to subdue the Spanish Army, which would have been surrounded with Enemies on all Sides, in a Country beyond Measure rugged and difficult. But they were prevented by the Expeditionousness of the Duke of Alva, who leaving a Garrison of a Thousand Foot in St. Jean Pied de Port, with all the Artillery, passed to Pampelona through the Pass of Roncivalle before the Enemy arrived. But the King of Navarre and Palissé, who had received a Reinforcement of Four Hundred Lances and Seven Thousand German Foot from the Dauphine, being disappointed of their Hopes, made their Appearance before Pampelona with four Pieces of Artillery, which they had conveyed with great Difficulty over the rough and craggy Mountains. They attempted to take the Place by Storm, but were repulsed, and constrained by the Season of the Year, it being in December, and the Want of Provisions in that barren Country, to raise the Siege, and repass the Pirenees, on which by the Difficulties of the Passes, and the Obstructions they met with from the Peasants, they were forced to leave their Artillery. At the same time Lautrech, who had made an Inroad into Biscay with Three Hundred Lances and Three

A. D. 1512. Three Thousand Foot, and plundered and burnt all that came in his Way, after an unsuccessful Attempt on the Town of St. Sebastian, repassed the Mountains, and returned to the Army, which, having nothing farther to fear or hope, broke up, and left the King of Aragon in free and peaceable Possession of the Kingdom of Navarre.

AT this Time it came to be discovered that Ferdinando, Son of Federigo, late King of Naples, and declared Duke of Calabria, had made a private Agreement with the King of France, and was contriving to make his Escape to the French Army, which lay not far from the Town of Logroña. On this Discovery the King of Aragon, who was at that Time in Logroña, sent the young Prince to the Castle of Sciativa, in which the Kings of Aragon use to imprison such Persons as are distinguished by their Nobility or extraordinary Merit; and Filippo Copola, a Neapolitan, who had gone secretly to the King of France to treat about the Affair, was quartered; Fortune so varying the Lot

Lot of Mortals, that he received his Punishment in the Service of a Prince whose Grandfather by the Father's Side had caused his Father the Count di Sarni to be beheaded. And the Discovery of this Conspiracy, which had its Original from a Fryar who was privately sent to Ferdinando from the Duke of Ferrara, had some Influence on the Affairs of Italy: For the Catholic King, who was before inclined to satisfy the Pope, was now much more incited to it by this Affront, so that he sent Orders to the Viceroy and his Ambassador at Rome to lead his Army against Ferrara whenever the Pope pleased, without demanding any Money of him more than was necessary for the Subsistence of the Soldiers.

THESE were the Transactions during the Course of this Year in Italy, France and Spain. The following Year 1513 <sup>1513.</sup> was as full of memorable Events as the preceding: It began with a Cessation of Arms on all Sides; for the Venetians neither gave nor received any Molestation. Only the Viceroy went with Three Thousand sand Foot to besiege the Castle of Trezzo, which surrendered on Condition that the Garrison might march out in Safety with their Effects. But the Minds of the People in general were disquieted with the Thoughts of future Events; for it was known that the King of France, having delivered his Kingdom from Foreign Arms, and resumed new Spirits from his numerous Levies of German Infantry, and the considerable Addition he had made to his Establishment of Lances, had nothing so much in View as the Recovery of the Dutchy of Milan. But though he set his Heart upon this Enterprize, and was extremely desirous to hasten it while the Castles of Milan and Cremona were still in his Possession, yet considering the great Difficulties that would occur from the Opposition of so many Enemies, and being not without Apprehensions that the King of England might next Summer attack his Dominions with a very potent Army, he resolved to make no Movement unless he could either separate some of the Confederates from their common Association, or procure an Alliance with the Venetians. That one or other other of these Events might happen he A. D. had various Reasons to hope from the 1513.

 Transactions of the last Year: For the Grounds Bishop of Goritz, when he was on his of his Journey from Rome to Milan, had given a Hopes of favourable Audience to a Domestic of Success.
 Cardinal San Severino, sent to him in the Name of the Queen of France, and had afterwards privately sent to France a Confidant of his own with Overtures, proposing that the King should assist Cæsar against the Venetians; that a Marriage should be contracted between the second Daughter of the King and Cæsar's Grandson Charles, with the Dutchy of Milan for her Dowry; that the King should make over to his Daughter and future Son-in-law his Pretensions to the Kingdom of Naples; and that the Emperor might not be obliged to trust to bare Words and Promises, the Spouse should immediately be delivered into his Hands; and that when the King should have recovered the Dutchy of Milan, Cremona and the Ghiaradadda should be put in the Possession of Cæsar.
 The King was also in Hopes of entering into an Alliance with the Venetians, who were

A. D. 1513. were highly provoked at the Viceroy's taking Possession of Brescia, and much more at the subsequent Convention at Rome between the Pope and Cæsar; for which Reason the King, taking Advantage of that Juncture, had very privately ordered to Court Andrea Gritti, who was taken at Brescia, and still remained a Prisoner in France, and contrived that Gianjacopo da Trivulzi, in whom the Venetians put great Confidence, should, under Pretence of other Business, send his Secretary to Venice. He had also some Prospect of an Agreement with the King of Aragon, who, according to his usual Way of entrusting his Concerns with Persons in religious Orders, had privately sent into France two Fryars, who, under a Show of Zeal for the public Good, should begin with addressing the Queen with Proposals relating to a Peace, either universal, or particular between the two Kings. But they had but small Hopes of Success, for the King of France knew that his Catholic Majesty intended to retain Navarre, and that it would be an Act of great Cruelty, and of the highest Indignity imaginable, imaginable, to abandon a King who, for <sup>A. D.</sup> procuring his Friendship, and in Confi- <sup>1513.</sup> dence of his Assistance, was fallen into so great a Calamity.

BUT the chief Concern of the King of France was a Reconciliation with the Swiss, on which he knew that Victory infallibly depended, by the vast Authority which that Nation had at present obtained, <sup>Swiss in</sup> not only by the Terror of their Arms, but <sup>great Re-</sup>putation. by their Conduct, which no longer appeared like that of mercenary Soldiers or Grasers, but of Men educated in the Administration of States, keeping a strict Eye, as is usual in a well managed Commonwealth, over every Step taken in public Affairs, and suffering no Movement to be made but at their Discretion. Hence Switzerland became the Residence of Ambassadors from all the Christian Princes, and the Pope, and almost all the Italian Powers, paid them yearly Pensions, to be received into their Confederacy, and for Permission to lift Soldiers of that Nation, when Occasion required, for their own Defence. The Swiss, grown proud at this Authority, and remembering that by their Arms first Charles King of France had subverted the happy State of Italy, and Lewis his Successor had acquired the Dutchy of Milan, recovered Genoa, and overthrown the Venetians, they behaved towards every one after an imperious and insolent Manner. The King of France, however, besides the Encouragement given him by many private Persons among the Swiss, and his persuading himself that he should work upon them by Offers of a very large Sum of Money, entertained Hopes of Success because the Cantons had never ratified the Agreement concluded between the Government of Milan in the Name of Massimiliano Sforza and their Ambassadors, by which, as soon as he should be put in Possession of the Dutchy of Milan and its Fortresses, he was to pay them an Hundred and Fifty Thousand Ducats, and Forty Thousand more every Year for Five and Twenty Years to come, on which Consideration they were to receive him under their Protection, and allow him to list their Foot into his Service. Wherefore in the Beginning of this

this Year the King, tho' he had before A. D. in vain attempted to obtain an Audience 1513. for the Ambassadors whom he designed to send in order to treat about a Reconciliation, consented to give them free Possession of the Fortresses of the Val di Lugana, and Lugarna, as a Price at which he desired to purchase only a bare Hearing. With so much Indignity did great Princes court the Friendship of that Nation!

MONS. de la Tremouille then, by Commission from the King, arrived at Lucern, where a Diet was called to give him an Audience. But tho' he met with a cheerful Reception, he soon found that his Labours in regard to the Dutchy of Mi- lan would be fruitless. For a few Days before Six of the Cantons had ratified and signed the Articles of the Agreement made with Massimiliano Sforza, three had resolved to ratify it, and the other three seemed as yet to stand in Suspense. There was no more Talk therefore about the Affair of Milan, but Tremouille proposed to them their Assistance of the King at least in the Recovery of Genoa and Asti,
which

A. D. which were not included in the Convention made with Massimiliano. To give Weight to this Demand Trivulzio, under Pretence of treating about his private Concerns, requested Leave to come to the Diet, and obtained a Pass, but on Condition that he should treat of nothing relating to the King of France; and as soon as he was arrived at Lucern, he received Orders not so much as to converse with Tremouille either in public or private. At last the Articles of the Treaty with the Duke of Milan were ratified by the common Consent of all the Cantons, and every Demand of the King of France was rejected, and it was further resolved that no Leave should be granted him to list Soldiers of their Nation for his Service either in Italy or elsewhere.

 Demands
 of the King of France rejected by the Swiss.

THE King of France thus excluded by the Swiss, found it necessary to reconcile himself either with Cæsar or with the Venetians, who at the same time were treating also with Cæsar. For the Confederates entertaining a Suspicion of their embracing a Reconciliation with the King of France, Goritz consented that they <sup>A. D.</sup> should retain Vicenza. But the Senate <sup>1513.</sup> taking Encouragement from the same Cause as excited the Fears of the Enemy, refused to make Peace without the Restitution of Verona, for which they offered to recompense Cæsar with the larger Sum of Money. But finding their Demand attended with Difficulties, they were the more inclined to embrace the Friendship of the French, and agreed, by Trivulzio's Secretary, to enter into a Confederacy with the King on the Foot of the first Alliance, by which they were to have the Possession of Cremona and the Ghiaradadda. But the Secretary having expressly mentioned in the Instrument that nothing should be of any Validity unless it were approved by the King within a certain Time, various were the Debates in Council whether it was more expedient to chuse a Reconciliation with the Emperor, or a Confederacy with the Venetians. Robertet, a Secretary of State, and of great Authority, Trivulzio, and almost all the chief Men of the Council advised the latter, representing that present Experience had

A. D. demonstrated the great Prejudice they 1513. had received from the Inconstancy of Cæsar, the Hatred he had conceived Reasons against the King, and his Desire to refor pre- ferring the vengeance himself, especially as they had Venetians. learnt with deep Concern from Authors of no mean Credit, that he had been often heard to say, and very lately, that he had fixed in his Mind the Memory of seventeen Injuries that he had received from the French, and that he would not lose the Opportunity which now offered of revenging himself for every one of them; that he would enter into a Treaty with no other Design than, by means of a fraudulent Reconciliation, to have the greater Conveniency to do Mischief, or at least interrupt what he knew to be under Negotiation with the Venetians, or to retard the Preparations of War; that the Man deserved no Pity nor Excuse who being once deceived by another, was so unwary as ever to trust him again.

ON the Contrary the Cardinal of San Severino, induced rather by his Zeal for a Party in Opposition to Trivulzio, as his
 Ad-

Adversaries said, than for any other Reason, because when he was in Milan he followed the Faction of the Ghibellines, replied, that nothing would be more for the King's Interest than to associate himself with Cæsar in order to break the Union between his Enemies, especially when a Conjunction could be effected by such Means, as, it was to be hoped, would render it durable; that it was the Property of Princes in their Resolutions always to prefer Interest before Benevolence, Hatred, or any other Passion; and what could be of greater Benefit to Cæsar than a present Assistance against the Venetians, and putting him in Hopes that his Grandson would succeed to the Dutchy of Milan? If Cæsar were once separated from the others, the Catholic King would make no Opposition to his Authority, out of Regard to the Interest of his Grandson, and for other Considerations; and nothing could strike a greater Terror into the Pope. On the contrary, a Confederacy with the Venetians would be highly dishonourable on account of the Cession which must be the Dutchy of Milan, that the King had set all Europe in a Combustion to recover them; and yet a Conjunction with the Victory, if the Union between the others were not dissolved.

THIS Opinion at last prevailed through the Authority of the Queen, who was desirous of the Aggrandizement of her Daughter, provided that till the Time of Marriage she might be permitted to remain under the Tuition of her Mother, who would engage her Word to keep her in the Name of Cæsar as a Spouse designed for his Grandson, and to resign her to her Husband, as soon as she should be of an Age fit for Matrimony. But the King being afterwards assured that Cæsar would not consent to this Restriction, and, what is more, that he had artfully made his Proposals rather to give him Occasion to proceed more slowly in his other Projects, cast off all Thoughts of this Negotiation, and recalled Asparot, Brother of Lautrec, who who had set out from Court with his Commission to treat with Goritz on this Affair. A. D.

1513.

ON the other Side, the Apprehensions of a Union between the King of France and the Venetians increasing daily, the King of Aragon advised Cæsar to restore Verona; and proposed to him, with the Help of the Money which he would receive of the Venetians, and with the Spanish Army, to remove the War into Burgundy. Of the same Opinion was Goritz, who, in Hopes that he could work upon Cæsar by his Presence, returned to Germany, attended not only by Don Pedro Durrea, who came with him, but also by Giovan Battista Spinello Count of Carriati, the Spanish Ambassador at Venice, having first induced the Senate, that no new Difficulties might interrupt the depending Negotiation, to make a Truce for the whole Month of March, and passed his Word to the said Ambassadors that Cæsar should restore Verona, on a Promise of the Payment of Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand Ducats at certain Times, and Fifty Thousand Ducats yearly.

1513.

IN this turbulent Juncture and troublesome Times, the Pope fell Sick at a Time when his Imagination was teeming with grander Ideas and Conceptions than, perhaps, it had ever been before, for his Schemes were not contracted, but always enlarged by the Accomplishment of his Desires. Hence he had resolved to undertake in the Beginning of the Spring the Enterprize so long meditated against Ferrara. That City being left destitute of all Assistance, and expecting to be attacked by the Ecclesiastic Troops in conjunction with the Spanish Army, it was believed, would make but small Resistance. He had secretly purchased of Cæsar for Thirty Thousand Ducats the City of Siena for the Duke of Urbino, to whom he would never grant any Lands belonging to the Ecclesiastic State except Pesaro, that he might preserve unblemished the Glory of sincerely seeking the Aggrandisement of the Church. He had agreed to lend Cæsar Forty Thousand Ducats, for which he was to receive Modena in Pledge. He threatened the Lucchese for having in the

the Troubles of the Duke of Ferrara A. D. 1513. seized on the Carfagnana, and insisted that they should give it up to him. His Indignation was kindled against the Cardinal de' Medici, because he fancied that he was more devoted to the Catholic King than to himself, and because he was vexed that he had it not in his Power, as he had before imagined, to dispose of Florence, having formed new Designs, and new Negotiations, to change the State of that City. He was angry with the Cardinal of Sion for appropriating to himself a Revenue of above Thirty Thousand Ducats yearly out of the Estates and Possessions of several Persons in the Dutchy of Milan, and had deprived him of the Title of Legate, and cited him to Rome. The better to establish the Duke of Urbino in the Government of Siena by a good Understanding with his Neighbours, he had lately taken into his Pay Carlo Baglione with a Design to expel from Perugia Gian Pagolo, who was very closely allied by Affinity to the Sons of Pandolfo Petrucci, Successors to their Father's Grandeur. He designed to constitute Ottaviano Fre-

A. D. <sup>1513</sup> Fregoso Doge of Genoa, and to remove Janus from that Dignity, with the Consent of the other Fregosi, because it appeared from the Rank which the Ancestors of Ottaviano had held in that City that the Office belonged rather to him. He had it continually in his Thoughts to remove out of Italy, or oppress by Help of the Swiss, whom alone he magnified and carested, the Spanish Army, that he might seize on the Kingdom of Naples, by which Means Italy would remain (to use his own frequent Expression) free from Barbarians*. With this View he had prevented the Swiss from entering into a Confederacy with the Catholic King; and yet, as if it had been in his Power to smite all the World at once, he continued eagerly bent against the King of France, though he had given Audience to a Messenger from the Queen, and

and excited against him the Arms of the A. D. King of England, to whom he had ap-<sup>1513.</sup> pointed that the Title of Most Christian King should be transferred by a Decree of the Lateran Council, for which Purpose there was already drawn up a Bull, which also contained a Deprivation of Lewis of the Dignity and Title of King of France, with Leave for any one to seize upon that Kingdom.

IN the Midst of such and so great Designs, and perhaps of greater unknown (for of so fierce and resolute a Mind no <sup>Death of Pope</sup> Conception is incredible, however vast <sup>Julius II.</sup> and boundless) Death intervened after a Sickness of many Days. When he was sensible that he was drawing near his End, he ordered a Consistory to be called, at which his Weakness would not permit him to be present in Person, but he caused the Bull to be confirmed which he had before published against him who should obtain the Pontificate by Simony, and declared the Election of a Successor to belong to the College of Cardinals, and not to a Council, and that the Schismatic Cardinals

A. D. <sup>1513.</sup> Cardinals should have no Power to intervene in the Election; but he forgave them, he said, all their Offences committed against himself, and prayed God to pardon them the Injuries they had done to his Church. After this he beseeched the College of Cardinals to gratify him so far as to grant the City of Pesaro in Vicarage to the Duke of Urbino, putting them in mind that it was chiefly by means of that Duke that at the Death of Giovanni Sforza it had been recovered to the Church. This was the only Instance in which he shewed any private Affection or Concern for his own Family; on the contrary, when the Lady Felice his Daughter instantly besought him, as did many others by her Intercession, to create Guido da Montefalco a Cardinal, because they were Brother and Sister by the Mother's Side, he positively answered that he was not a Person worthy of that Dignity. Thus in all Respects retaining his usual Constancy and Severity, with the same Judgment and Vigour of Mind which he enjoyed before his Sickness, after devoutly receiving the Sacraments of the Church, on the Night of February 21, when

HE was a Prince of inestimable Courage His Character, and Constancy, but impetuous, and boundless in his Conceptions, which would have carried him headlong to his own Ruine, had he not been sustained more by the Reverence of the Church, the Discord of Princes, and the Condition of the Times, than by his own Moderation or Prudence.
He would certainly have been worthy of the highest Honour had he been a secular Prince, or employed the same Ardor and Vigilance with which he prosecuted the Advancement of the Church in temporal Greatness by the Force of Arms, in promoting her Progress towards Purity and spiritual Perfection by the milder Arts of Peace. His Memory, however, is most dear and honoured above that of all his Predecessors, especially by those who having lost the true Names of Things, and confounded the Distinction that arises from weighing them in a just Balance, think it more the

A. D. 1513. Duty of Pontiffs to increase the Empire of the Apostolic See by Arms and the Blood of Christians, than to strive and labour, by the Example of a good Life, and by correcting and healing a Degeneracy and Corruption of Manners, to promote the Salvation of those Souls for whose Benefit they boast that Christ has constituted them his Vicars upon Earth.

ON Advice of the Pope's Death the Consequences of his Death. Viceroy of Naples marched with the Spanish Soldiers towards Piacenza, and constrained that City to return, as it formerly used to be, under the Dominion of the Dukes of Milan; and the Parmesans, induced by the same Terror, followed the Example of the Piacentines. On the other Side the Duke of Ferrara soon recovered his Towns in Romagna, and then came before Reggio; but his Approach occasioning no Commotion in the Place, he would not venture to stay there, because the Spanish Army had extended their Quarters between Piacenza and Reggio. There was no other Movement in the Ecclesiastic State, nor did Rome or the College of Cardinals dinals find themselves under those Difficulties that had embarrassed them at the Death of the two last Pontiffs. Wherefore, after the Performance of the funeral Rites according to Custom, Five and Twenty Cardinals peaceably entered the Conclave, having first declared the Marquis of Mantoua's Son, whom Julius had kept as a Hostage, free from his Word of Honour, and at Liberty to return to his Father. The first Care of the Conclave was to moderate, by very strict Articles, the Authority of the future Pontiff, which the Deceased, they said, had exercised beyond the Bounds of Moderation ; but as among Men some have not the Courage to oppose the Will of the Prince, and others are solicitous to gain his Favour, so these same Persons not long after voluntarily repealed almost every one of these Articles.

ON the Seventh Day of the Conclave the Cardinals unanimously elected Pontiff Giovanni Cardinal de' Medici, who assumed the Name of Leo X. aged 37 ; which was very surprising on account of his Youth with Regard to the Custom of past Times,

A. D. 1513. but principally owing to the Diligence of the young Cardinals, who had long before tacitly agreed together to create the first Pontiff out of their own Number. This Election gave vast Satisfaction to almost all Christendom; every one persuading himself that Leo would prove a most accomplished Pontiff, from the dear Memory of his Father's Merits, and from the Fame which spread every where of his own Liberality and good Nature, having the Reputation of a chaste Person, and of unblameable Manners; and it was hoped too that he would imitate the Example of his Father in being a Lover of learned Men, and of all those of an illustrious Genius; and those Expectations were increased by considering that he was chosen fairly without Simony, or Suspicion of any corrupt Practice. It seemed also as if Heaven itself gave its Approbation in the very Beginning of this Pontificate, for in the fourth Day after the Election the deprived Cardinals of Santa Croce and San Severino came into the Power of the new Pope. These Prelates having Advice of the Death of Julius set out for Rome by Sea, accompanied panied by the French Ambassador, and put in at Leghorn, where being informed of the Election of the Cardinal de' Medici, trusting to his Good-nature, and the Cardinal of San Severino in particular depending on his intimate Friendship with the new Pontiff and his Brother, obtained a Pass of the Governor of Leghorn, which did not extend beyond the Bounds of his Jurisdiction, and went ashore. From Leghorn, without requiring any farther Security, they boldly ventured to Pisa, in which City they were respectfully received, and thence conducted to Florence, where they were put under honourable Custody, without any Power to depart. They were confined at the Desire of the Pontiff, who by the Bishop of Orvieto, sent for that Purpose, exhorted them, with very civil and gracious Expressions, that for their own Security, and for the Good of the Church, they would be content to stay at Florence till it should be determined in what Manner it was proper for them to go to Rome; and that, since they had been legally deprived of their Dignity, and their Deprivation was confirmed in the Lateran Council, they

Pompous Coronation of the new Pope.

THE first Transaction of the new Pope was his Coronation, which was performed, according to Custom, in the Church of San Giovanni Laterano, with so pompous an Appearance of his Family and Court, of all the Prelates, and many Nobles from divers Parts, and with so great a Concourse of the Roman People, that it was universally believed that Rome had never seen a more superb and magnificent Day since the Inundations of the Barbarians. In this Solemnity the Standard of the Church was carried by Alfonso d'Esse, who had obtained a Suspension of his Censures, and was come to Rome in great Hopes, from the gentle Disposition of the Pope, to settle his Affairs. The Standard of the Knights* of Rhodes was carried by Giulio de' Medici,

Medici, all in Armour, and mounted on a large Courser; he was by Nature inclined to the Profession of Arms, but his Destiny drew him against his Will to a sacerdotal Life, in which he was to be a surprising Example of the Variety of Fortune, and what rendered that Day the more memorable and remarkable, was to consider that the Man who now carried with so much Pomp and Splendor the Ensigns of so great a Dignity, had but the Year before on the same Day been made a miserable Captive. This magnificent Parade confirmed the Vulgar in their Expectations from this Pontificate, every one flattering himself with Happiness under a Pontiff that abounded in Liberality, and delighted in Splendor, for it is certain that the Expences of that Day amounted to an Hundred Thousand Ducats. But Men of better Judgment would have been more pleased if the Affair had been conducted with greater Gravity and Moderation, being of Opinion that so much Pomp did not become a Pontiff, and that it was by no means suitable to the Condition of the present Times to squander away the Treas-

BUT neither the Change of the Pontiff nor any other Events were ſufficient to eſtabliſh the Quiet of Italy; on the contrary, the Diſpoſition of Affairs began manifeſtly to tend more to War than to Peace.

*Cæſar refuſes to

For Cæſar being quite averſe to the Reſtitution of Verona, by which he imagined that he ſhould deprive himſelf of an eaſy Entrance into Italy, though the Truce had been prolonged for all April, rejected the Articles of the Agreement negotiated at Milan; and being diſguſted at the Importunities of the Ambaſſadors of the Catholic King, told the Count di Carriati that, from the Inclination which he ſhewed towards the Venetians, he ought rather to be called a Venetian than a Spaniſh Ambaſſador.

the Truce made between the moſt Chriſtian and Catholic Kings, for a Year only, for their Dominions beyond the Mountains.

By this Truce the King of France, being freed from all Apprehensions on the Side of Spain, found it very easy to renew the War in the Dutchy of Milan. The Catholic King was at all Times averſe to a War with the French on the other Side of the Mountains; for not abounding with Money, and therefore obliged to aſſiſt himſelf with the Forces of the Nobility and People of Spain, either theſe Succours were not in due Readineſs, or he was neceſſitated in Time of War to ſtand as it were in Subjection to their Pleaſure. But at this Juncture he was mightily confirmed in his old Counſels by his Deſire to eſtabliſh his newly acquired Kingdom of Navarre in Peace, and much more becauſe, ſince the Death of Iſabella, being no longer King but Governor of Caſtile, he had not ſo well founded his Authority in troubleſome Times, as he had lately found by Experience in the Defence of Navarre, which, though it ended happily, was however rendered very hazardous by the Slowneſs of the Succours. The King therefore, unwilling to be reduced to ſuch Straits, agreed on the Truce before he knew of

A. D.

A. D. the Death of the Pontiff, though it had 1513. not been published till he was informed of the Election of another. He alledged, in Justification of this unexpected Resolution, that the Pope and the Venetians had violated the League, since after the Battle of Ravenna they would never pay the Forty Thousand Ducats, which they were bound to do as long as the French had any Possessions in Italy. As for himself it was manifest he had only in View the common Welfare of the Confederates, for he had not appropriated to himself the Rewards of the common Victory, nor possessed in Italy so much as a small Tower more than what he was in Possession of before the War. But the Pope had his private Ends in Prospect, and had made a Property of what should have remained in common, by seizing on Parma, Piacenza and Reggio, and had employed all his Thoughts on making himself Master also of Ferrara; by this covetous Desire he had disturbed the Measures for the Recovery of the Fortresses of the Dutchy of Milan, and the Lantern of Genoa: That he himself thority for procuring an Agreement between Cæsar and the Venetians, but that the Pope had for his own Interest precipitately excluded the Venetians from the League; in which Affair his own Ambassadors had acted imprudently, for they had not consented that his Name should be inserted in the Article in which the Confederacy was introduced, because they knew that such was his Intention, and yet had suffered him to be named in the Article by which the Venetians were excluded: That the Venetians had not in that Transaction behaved in a Manner answerable to the Opinion People had entertained of their Prudence, having set so high a Value on Vicenza as to resolve not to part with it, though it were to free themselves from a burdensome War: That it was impossible for him to maintain the Army which he had in Italy without the Payment of the Subsidies which had been promised him, and he was less able to sustain the whole War on the Frontiers of his own Kingdoms, which he well knew all the rest desired, and were labouring to procure: That the Pontiff did not dissemble his late

A. D. late unjust Desire to deprive him of the <sup>1513.</sup> Kingdom of Naples: That he was not however moved by these Injuries to think of abandoning the Church or the other States of Italy, while he found a suitable Correspondence, and that he was in Hopes that the Powers concerned, being induced by the Truce which he had made with the King, would be the more ready to enter into an Agreement with him for their mutual Defence: Ferdinando had inserted in the Instrument of the Truce the Names of Cæsar and the King of England, tho' he had communicated nothing of the Negotiation to either of these Princes; and it was ridiculous to observe, at the Time when the Truce was solemnly proclaimed throughout all Spain, the Arrival of a Herald from the King of England to notify the vast Preparations made by his Master for attacking the Kingdom of France, and to solicit the King of Aragon to be ready at the same time, as he had promised, to invade it on the Side of Spain.

THE Truce made in this Manner struck the greatest Terror into all the Italians who had been uneasy under the French Government, as they were firmly persuaded that the King of France would send with all Speed an Army on this Side the Mountains, that, through Cæsar's obstinate Refusal of a Peace, the Venetians would join with the French, and that it would be very difficult to resist their united Forces, because the Spanish Army, that had Time after Time drawn Sums of Money from the State of Milan, which was impoverished and exhausted with infinite Expences, had no longer any Means of Subsistence. As to the new Pontiff, they could not as yet dive into his Intentions, for tho' he was thought secretly to wish that the Power of the King of France might be bounded by the Mountains, yet being but newly placed in the pontifical Chair, and as much perplexed as the rest at the Truce made by the Catholic King at a Time when he was believed to be employing all his Thoughts on War, he stood in great Suspense of Mind, being disgusted also

A. D. 1513. also that when he had solicited with great Earnestness the Restitution of Parma and Piacenza to the Church, he found a Readiness to give him Hopes, but Slowness in the Execution, all the other Allies being desirous to preserve those Cities to the Dutchy of Milan, and perhaps expecting that the Pope's Desire to recover them would induce him to the Defence of that State. The Assistance of the Swiss was more certain as well as more powerful; but when it was considered that neither Massimiliano Sforza nor the other Confederates were in a Condition to advance the Money necessary, according to Agreements, to put them in Motion, it was feared they would refuse to descend into the State of Milan when they were most wanted.

ON the other Side the King of France, depending on the Truce, resolved to send an Army into Italy, being put in Hopes of Success by the Reasons mentioned above, to which might be added that he knew very well that the People of the State of Milan, being plagued with the repeated Exactions and Rapines of the Swiss, and the Quarters and Payments provided for the Spaniards, heartily wished to return under his Dominion, having found by Experience the Government of the French easy and desirable in comparison of the severe and oppressive Administration of others. Besides, many private Noblemen, by particular Messages, directed some to the King, others to Trivulzio, whom the King had sent to Lions, that he might be nearer at hand to treat with the Milanese, encouraged his Majesty not to delay the March of his Army, promising, as soon as it had passed the Mountains, to take up Arms, and openly declare for him. To these Motives were added the constant and pressing Sollicitations of Trivulzio and of the other Exiles, who, as is usual with those who are forced to leave their native Country, represented the Undertaking as very easy, especially as the Venetians were to assist in it. The King was also constrained to hasten his Enterprize by flattering himself that he should be able to attain his Ends before he was attacked by the King of England,

THE King therefore resolving to begin the War without Delay, for which Purpose, that he might be ready on all Occasions, he had before sent a great Number of Lances into Burgundy and Dauphine, applied himself with all Diligence to perfect the Treaty with the Venetians, which had been many Months under Debate, but had met with Delays and Obstructions as well from one Party as from the other. For the King was held in Suspense sometimes by his Hopes of a Peace with Cæsar, sometimes by the obstinate Demand that the Venetians made of Cremona and the great Authority in the Republic proposed an Agreement with Cæſar, representing that it was more for their Intereſt to eaſe themſelves at preſent from ſo vaſt an Expence, and to free themſelves from Danger, that they might be enabled the more readily to embrace ſuch Opportunities as ſhould offer themſelves, than, at a Juncture when the Republic was exhausted, and the Sub-ſtance of private Perſons much impaired, to involve themſelves in new Wars in conjunction with the King of France, who had ſo lately ſhown them how much Faith and Security they were to reſe in his Friendſhip. The major Part however being of Opinion that ſo fair an Opportunity would very rarely offer for recovering their antient State, and that an Agreement with Cæſar while he retained Verona would not free them from Troubles and Dangers, it was reſolved to enter into a Confederacy with the King of France, without inſiſting on Cremona and the Ghi- aradadda ; and the ſame was concluded in the King's Court by Andrea Gritti, who had had lately appeared more like an Ambassador than a Prisoner. By this Treaty <sup>A. D. 1513.</sup> Bartolomeo Alviano and Andrea Gritti obtained their Liberty, the Venetians were bound to assist the King of France with Eight Hundred Men at Arms, Fifteen Hundred light Horse, and Ten Thousand Foot against all who should oppose his Recovery of Asti, Genoa, and the Dutchy of Milan; and the King was obliged to assist the Venetians till they had intirely recovered all that they possessed in Lombardy and in the Marquisate of Trevigi before the League of Cambray. As soon as the Confederacy was stipulated Gianjacopo da Trivulzi and Bartolomeo Alviano set out for Susa; Alviano that he might proceed from thence by a safer Way to Venice, and Trivulzi to assemble there the Army designed for the War, which consisted of Fifteen Hundred Lances, Eight Hundred light Horse, and Fifteen Thousand Foot, Eight Thousand of whom were Germans, and the rest French, all under the Command of M. de la Tremouille, whom the King, to give the more Reputation to the Proceedings, appointed his Lieutenant.

THE HISTORY OF

LEWIS at this Juncture very earnestly intreated the Pope not to obstruct the Recovery of his Dutchy, offering him not only to stop any farther Proceedings after that Conquest, but always to make Peace at the Discretion of his Holiness. The Pope lent a gracious Ear to these Assurances. and, to gain the greater Credit to his Words, treated with the King by the Ministry and Mediation of his Brother Giuliano. The King, however, suspected him on many Accounts; as, the Memory of Things preceding his Pontificate; his dispatching to him, immediately upon his Assumption, Cintio his familiar Friend with a Letter expressing much Civility, but in such general Terms as manifested that he was not well affected in his Heart towards him; besides, he had given Consent that Prospero Colonna should be constituted by the Duke of Milan his Captain General, which Julius, out of Hatred to the Colonna's, had always opposed. But what gave much more Umbrage to his Majesty was the Pope's intimating to the King of England that he was willing to adhere to

Pope suspected by Lewis.

the Confederacy contracted with Cæsar, A. D.
the Catholic King, and himself; and his 1513.
Letter to the Community of the Swiss, in which he seemed to exhort them to the Defence of Italy, and did not dissemble that he was willing to continue the Confederacy made with them by Julius, in which they undertook, for the yearly Pension of Twenty Thousand Ducats, the Protection of the Ecclesiastic State. Leo also sufficiently betrayed his Inclination by not receiving the Duke of Ferrara into Favour, and delaying, under various Pretences, the Restitution of Reggio till the Return of his Brother the Cardinal to Rome, who, to avoid the Persecutions of Julius, and the Instances of the King of France for his repairing to the Pisan Council, was retired to his Bishopric of Agria in Hungary. But what gave the King most Reason to suspect the Pontiff was that he had, though as secretly as it was possible, advised the Vene- tian Senate to agree with Cæsar; which was an Attempt in direct Opposition to the Designs of the King, who had also taken it ill that the Pope, pretending no other Motive than the Duty of his pontifical I 2 Office,

A. D. Office, had written to him a Brief exhorting him to cease his warlike Preparations, and to shew himself disposed rather to put an End to the War by some honourable Composition: A pious Pretence, which in itself the King would not have blamed, if his Holiness, moved by the same Desire of Peace, had exhorted the King of England to forbear molesting France.

Causes of the Pope's Dissasfection to the French

THE King of France indeed had good Reason to be jealous of the Pope, for Leo desired nothing more than that the French should have no longer any Footing in Italy, either because he thought it most conducive to the common Security, and to the Grandeur of the Church, or because he retained the Memory of the Injuries received from the Crown of France. For though his Father and his other Ancestors had been firmly attached to the French Interest, and had on several Occasions reaped both Honour and Profit from their Adherence, yet he was most affected with what had more lately happened when he and his Brothers were driven out of Florence by the

the Coming of King Charles ; and this A. D. present King was known to favour the <sup>1513.</sup> popular Government, and had always despised the Medici, or if at any Time he seemed inclined to espouse their Cause, it was only with a Design to employ them as Tools for drawing the Florentines by that Suspicion into Conventions for his own Advantage, and then cast them quite out of Remembrance. His Resentment might perhaps too be aggravated by reflecting that after the Battle of Ravenna he himself had been carried Prisoner to Milan, and had been ordered by the King to be conducted to France.

BUT though the Pope, either for the abovementioned or for some other Reasons, was thus disaffected towards the French, yet, since he saw no strong Foundations, as he could have wished, for Resistance, he was obliged to proceed with Caution, and to dissemble, as much as he could, his Intentions, yet always gladly hearkening to any Suits or Instances made to him against the King. The Swiss, who were very ready to put themselves in Motion for

A. D. defending the Dutchy of Milan, offered 1513. to take the Field with a much greater Swiss offer Number of Men, if they were supplied to defend Milan. with but a moderate Sum of Money, which, through the Inability of the other Allies, could be expected only from the Pope.
 But the Designs of the Viceroy were uncertain, and his Speeches various and myfterious: For sometimes he offered the Pontiff to oppose the French, and openly to interest himself in the Cause by sending his Troops to join with his own, and maintaining a good Number of Foot for three Months; and to make himself the more easily believed he had recalled his Soldiers from the Territories of Parma and Reggio, and was encamped with his Army on the River Trebbia; but some of his Troops, which remained in Garrison at Tortona and Alessandria, he had never moved from their Quarters: Sometimes he affirmed that he had received Orders from his King, at the same time that he signified to him that he had made a Truce, to lead back the Army into the Kingdom of Naples.

BUT Gieronimo Vick, the Aragonian Ambassador to the Pope, talked in a different

ferent Strain, in which he assured him A. D. that the King his Master promised, if his <sup>1513.</sup> Holiness would undertake the Defence of Milan, to have no Regard to the Truce he had made, but begin a War in France, which he might lawfully do without Breach of Faith. By this Conduct many were persuaded that the King of Aragon, <sup>Politic</sup> being apprehensive that there would be <sup>Conduct</sup> none to oppose the Progress of the French <sup>of the</sup> on account of the Truce, had ordered the <sup>King of</sup> Aragon. Viceroy that if he should find no hearty Concurrence of the Allies in the Defence of the Dutchy of Milan, he should not labour to provoke the King of France by new Injuries, but march off with the Army for Naples. And for these Reasons Ferdinando was inclined to a Peace with France, and offered to bring into it Cæsar and the King of England; and to render Lewis the more easy and tractable, in case he should recover Milan, he did in a manner assure him that his Army should not oppose his Enterprize.

THE Viceroy therefore intending to depart recalled the Soldiers who were in

A. D. 1515. Garrison at Tortona and Alessandria under the Marquis of Pescara, signifying, as it was reported, at the same Time his Resolution to Trivulzio, with an Intention that the King of France should regard his Departure as if it were made upon his Account. He did not however immediately put his Design in Execution, because the Swiss, being most ardently intent on the Defence of the Dutchy of Milan, had by a public Decree sent thither Five Thousand Foot, and given Hopes of sending a much greater Number; but, rather pretending the contrary, sent Prospero Colonna to treat with the Swiss about appointing a Place for joining their Forces against the French. It was thought he proceeded in this Manner, either because he had been informed that Cæsar was greatly displeased with the Truce, or that he had received new Orders from his King to obey the Commands of the Pontiff, who, between the Struggles of his small Hopes on one Side, and his own Inclinations on the other, remained in the same Perplexity. The Swiss, however, were arrived in the Tortonese, where, as Prospero gave

gave them Notice, the Viceroy designed to join them; but now that General excused himself on various Pretences, and requested that they would come and join him on the Trebbia. By this Demand they plainly perceived the Difference between his Speeches and Intentions, and fiercely answered, that he did not make this Request in order to go boldly and face the Enemy, but that he might turn his Back with the greater Security; that it was of no Importance to the Swiss, if he was afraid to fight the French; that it was all one to them whether he went, staid, or ran away, for they were sufficient of themselves to defend the Dutchy of Milan against all Invaders.

A. D.
Fierce answer of the Swiss to the Viceroy.

BUT now the whole Country was in a Tumult; the Count of Musocco, Son of Gianjacopo, had taken Possession of Asti and Alessandria without Opposition; the French were in full March from Susa; and the Duke of Milan coming too late to secure Alessandria had joined the Swiss near Tortona, who receiving express Notice from the Viceroy that he had resolved to

A. D. 1513. to depart, they marched from thence to Novara. The Milaneſe, on the Report that the Viceroy was departed, ſent Ambaſſadors to Novara, to excuſe themſelves to the Duke for that, having none to defend them, they had, to avoid utter Deſtruction, agreed with the French. The Duke ſeemed to accept their Excuses very favourably, and even commended them for affectionately conſulting the Safety of their common Country. On this Occaſion Sacromoro Viſconti, who commanded at the Siege of the Caſtle, revolted to the French, and ſupplied that Fortreſs with Proviſions.

Milan ſurrenders to the French

THE Viceroy then decamped from the Trebbia with all his Army, in which were Fourteen Hundred Men at Arms, and Eight Thouſand Foot, to return into the Kingdom of Naples, as if he deſpaired of the Affairs of Lombardy, and was therefore only ſollicitous to ſave his Army. But on the ſame Day, while he was on his March between Piacenza and Firenzuola, receiving Letters from Rome, he immediately turned about and marched back back to his Camp. So sudden an Alteration happened because the Pope, who about this Time had Parma and Piacenza restored to him, having resolved to try whether the Dutchy of Milan could be preserved by Means of the Swiss, had very privately delivered to Girolamo Mo- rone, the Duke's Ambassador at Rome, Forty-two Thousand Ducats to be sent to the Swiss; but with this Pretence, if it should come to the Knowledge of the others, that Twenty Thousand Ducats were on the Account of Pensions, and the other Twenty-two Thousand in Satisfaction for what the three Cantons pretended to be due from his Predecessor, who had always refused to pay them.

BY the Return of the Viceroy on the Trebbia, and the Report of the March of more Swiss, the Milaneze, repenting their hasty Resolution, put Massimiliano Sforza in Hopes that they would return under his Dominion whenever the Swiss and the Spanish Army should join together in the Field. The Viceroy, who was attended by Prospero Colonna, to encourage these

 } promising continually to pass without putting it in Execution, because, as he principally consulted the Safety of his Army, he resolved to proceed according to the Success of Affairs, it appearing to him very dangerous to have in his Front the French, and at his Rear the Venetians, who having already taken Possession of the City of Cremona, and thrown a Bridge over the Po at Cava, were in his Neighbourhood.

Alviano
Captain General
of the
Venetians.

BARTOLOMEO D' ALVIANO was gone from Susa by a long Way about to Venice, where having in their Councils without Contradiction thrown all the Blame of the Overthrow of the Gbiaradadda* on the Count of Pitigliano, and talked in a magnific Strain of the present War, he was constituted by the Senate Captain General with the same Powers that were conferred on Count Pitigliano when he was promoted to that high Post, and, as it happened, (through the frequent Sports of Fortune with the Ignorance of Mortals!) on the same Day that four Years before he

he fell into the Hands of his Enemies. He immediately set out for the Army, which was assembled at San Bonifacio in the Veronese, being accompanied by Teodoro da Trivulzi, as Lieutenant of the King of France, and with the greatest Speed imaginable, on the same Day that the French Army moved from Susa, approached the Gates of Verona, into which City some had conspired to receive him. But the next Day there entered into that Town by the River Adice Five Hundred German Foot, and the Plot also being discovered, Alviano losing all Hopes of getting Possession of the Place, resolved, contrary to the Authority of the Venetian Proveditor, to march towards the Po, to prevent the Spaniards from passing it, or, if Occasion should require, to join with the French *. He did not signify this Resolution to the Senate till after he was got one Day's March from Verona, because, tho' he alledged that the final Event of the War intirely depended on the Success

A. D. 1513. cefs of the Efforts in the Dutchy of Milan, and that if the French were unprosperous in that Country, whatever Attempts or Acquisitions were made in any other Parts would be fruitless and not durable, and that the Victory of the French in that State was therefore by all possible Means to be promoted, he was yet apprehensive, and not without Reason, that the Senate would contradict this Measure, not so much out of a Desire that he should first attend to the Recovery of Verona and Brescia, as because some of their other Commanders had condemned the Passage of the River Mincio, before they had received a particular Account of the Progress of the French, and represented how difficult it must be, if any Disaster should happen, to retire with Safety through the Veronese and the Mantouan, Countries either subject or devoted to Cæsar.

of Peschiera despairing of Defence gave <sup>A. D.</sup> up that Fortrefs on the Payment of a very <sup>1513.</sup> small Sum of Money to himself, and for some German Foot that were in Garrison.
About the same Time some of the principal Inhabitants of the Mountain, with a Multitude of Peasants, entered Brescia in favour of the Venetians; and yet Al- viano, tho' earnestly entreated by the Brescian Ambassadors, who found him at Gambera, and pressed by the Venetian Proveditor, would not consent to turn his March to Brescia, tho' it were only to tarry there for a Day, in order to recover the Castle, which was garrisoned in the Name of the Viceroy; so great was his Ardor to prosecute without Intermiffion his first Resolution! With the utmost Expedition he came before the Gates of Cremona, and finding that Galeazzo Palla- vicino, at the Invitation of some Cremonese, was at the same time entering the Place in favour of the King of France, he resolved to have no Sharers in the Glory of recovering that City, but fell upon his Troops and plundered them, and then entering the Town routed and made

Booty of Three Hundred Horse and Five Hundred Foot of the Duke of Milan, who lay in Garrison under the Command of Cesare Fieramusca. He had no Occasion to lose Time in the Recovery of the Castle, for that had always held out for the King of France, and had a little before been supplied with Provisions by Renzo da Ceri, who in his Return to Crema, of which he was Governor, had met at Serezana and routed Two Hundred Horse of Alessandro Sforza. Alviano after this posted himself at Cava on the Po, where he had a Bridge laid in readiness to pass, and did not prohibit his Soldiers from sometimes marauding on the Pope's Territories. From thence he proceeded to Pizzichitone, the Revolution of Cremona having given Occasion to Soncino, Lodi, and other circumjacent Towns to hang out French Colours. But first, as soon as he had recovered Cremona, he had ordered Renzo da Ceri to Brescia with Part of the Troops, to provide for the Establishment of that City, and for the Recovery of the Castle, but much more to check the prosperous Success of the Germans. For as

as soon as Alviano was decamped from A. D. before Verona, Roccandolf, who com- 1513. manded the German Foot, accompanied by Federigo Gonzaga da Bozzolo, marched out of Verona, with Six Hundred Horse and Two Thousand Foot, for San Boni- facio, where Alviano had left Three Hundred light Horse and Six Hundred Foot under the Command of Sigismondo Caballo and Giovanni Forte. These Troops being under no military Discipline, but dispersed about the Country, as soon as they perceived the Coming of the Enemy fled to Cologna, whither they were followed by the Germans, who forced an Entrance into the Town, and made them all Prisoners, after which they plundered and burnt the Place. They afterwards treated Soave in the same Manner, broke the Bridge which the Venetians had laid over the Adice, and would in the same Career of Success have seized on Vicenza, if a vast Number of Peasants had not speedily entered the Place. This Progress of the Enemy gave the more Concern, as it was reported that a Reinforcement of Foot

recover
Genoa.

IN the mean time the French Fleet, consisting of Nine light Gallies and other Vessels, approached Genoa by Sea; while Antoniotto and Gieronimo, Brothers of the Family of the Adorni, by the Favour of those of the Rivieras who were of their Faction, and with other Soldiers hired by the King, marched against it by Land. They had a very fair Opportunity given them by the Breach which had happened a little before between the Fieschi and the Doge of Genoa, with whom they were before united against the Adorni. For Gieronimo, Son of Gianluigi dal Fiesco, coming out of the public Palace, either on some accidental Quarrel arising, or some preconceived Jealousy, was murdered by Lodovico and Fregosino, Brothers of the Doge. On this barbarous Fact Ottobuono and Sinibaldo, Brothers of the Assassinated, retiring to their Castles, soon after entered into an Agreement with the King of France, and into a Conspiracy with the Adorni, and approached Genoa on another Quarter with

THE WARS IN ITALY. 147

with Four Thousand Men. The Doge <sup>A. D.</sup> was not sufficient of himself to resist the <sup>1513.</sup> Partisans of the Fieschi and Adorni in conjunction, and the Expeditionousness of his Adversaries prevented the Succours which he had requested of the Viceroy from coming in Season, and, to render his Affairs quite desperate, One Thousand of his Foot posted on the neighbouring Mountains were over-powered by the Enemy and defeated. The Doge therefore, together with Fregosino, having hardly had Time to save his own Life, fled by Sea, leaving his other Brother Lodovico to guard the Castelletto, and the Conquerors entered Genoa, where the Brothers of the Fieschi, transported with the Fury of Revenge, massacred Zaccheria, another Brother of the Doge, who was taken Prisoner in the Fight on the Mountains, and was an Accessary to the Murder of their Brother, and barbarously tying the dead Body to the Tail of a Horse dragged it through the whole City. Thus was Genoa reduced to the Obedience of the King of France, who appointed Antoniotto Adorno to govern the

A. D. 1513. Place under his Authority, and the French Fleet, after putting a Supply of Men and Provisions into the Lantern, and then plundering Specie, came to an Anchor in Porto Venero.

THE French had now intirely recovered what they had lost the Year before, except Novara and Como, which two Cities only in the whole Dutchy of Milan still remained in the Possession of Massimiliano Sforza. But the Glory of this War, to the great Shame of all the Rest, was destined, not to the French, not to the German Foot, not to the Spanish Arms, not to the Venetians, but wholly to the Swiss, against whom the French Army, leaving in Alessandria a Garrison sufficient to secure the Country on that Side the Po, now advanced, and approached them at Novara. They were become fierce and in high Spirits from such a Train of Success, from the Confession of the Enemies, who had shut themselves up within Walls, and from the manifest Fears of the Spaniards. Besides this, the present Face of Affairs seemed in a manner to represent

to the Memory of Men the Image and <sup>A. D.</sup> Resemblance of Times past. For this was <sup>1513:</sup> the same Novara in which Lodovico Sforza, the Father of the present Duke, had been made Prisoner; the same Generals, la Tremouille and Gianjacopo da Trivulzi, were in the French Camp; and some of the same Colours, and of the same Officers of those Cantons which had at that Time sold the Father, were now in the Service of the Son. Hence Tremouille had proudly written to the King that he would make him a Present of the Son for his Prisoner, from the same Place whence he presented him with the Father.

THE French battered the Walls of Novara with great Fury, but in a Place whence it would be very difficult and dangerous to descend into the City; and the Swiss seemed so little afraid of them, that they never suffered the Gate of the City toward their Camp to be shut*. A suffi-

* The Swiss Commander would never suffer any Bank to be cast up, or any Trench or Ditch to be dug, reposing all his Defence in his Arms, and Robustness and Vigour of Body; and sent a Trumpet to acquaint the French that the Gates of Novara were left open, and to advise them not to waste their Powder. Giovio.

 cient Breach being made in the Walls the Besiegers gave a very fierce Assault, but were repulsed with incredible Valour, and obliged to retire to their Quarters; where being informed that a Reinforcement of Swiss had the same Day entered Novara, and that Altofaffo, a General of great Reputation, was expected with a much greater Number, they despaired of Success, and retired the next Day two Miles from Novara, in Hopes of obtaining their Ends more by temporising, and taking Advantage of the Disorders and Distress of the Enemy for Want of Money, than by Force of Arms. But their Hopes were all frustrated by the Fierceness and high-spirited Courage of Mottino, one of the Swiss General Officers, who called an Assembly of the Multitude in the Square of Novara, and encouraged them with the warmest Expressions not to wait the Assistance of Altofaffo, whose Arrival was expected the next Day, but to march out and attack the Enemy in their Quarters, and not suffer the Glory and the Victory, which they might secure to themselves, to be shared in common, or rather to become wholly wholly transferred to others. For as A. D.

 Things consequent attract to themselves <sup>1513.</sup> Things preceding, and the Increase covers and eclipses the Part increased, so all the Praise and Honour would be ascribed not to them but to the new Comers.

“ THE more difficult and dangerous <sup>Speech of</sup> the Attempt, says Mottino, may possibly <sup>Mottino a</sup> appear, so much the more easy and safe it <sup>Swiss Ge-</sup> will prove in the Execution ; for Accidents <sup>neral to</sup> pected. The French at present have not the least Thought of being attacked by us ; as they have removed the Camp but this Day, they must have taken up their Quarters in a disorderly Manner, and without any Fortification. French Armies are not usually very eager to fight, unless supported by our Foot. And if they have for some Years past ventured to fight without us, yet they have never fought against us.

 What Amazement, what Terror will seize them, when they shall see themselves suddenly and furiously attacked by those whose Valour and Ferocity used to be their Confidence

A. D. 1513.  fidence and Security! Let not their Cavalry, or their Artillery give you much Concern, for we have on another Occasion experienced how much they rely on these Preparations when they have to deal with us. Did not Gaston de Foix, so bold a General, with such a Number of Lances, and so formidable a Train of Artillery, always retire before us on the Plains, when without Cavalry, or any other Arms than Pikes, we descended two Years ago to the very Gates of Milan? They have now in their Army German Foot; and this is what moves my Resentment, and makes me eager to embrace the Opportunity which this very Juncture offers us to convince the Man that he never took a worse Resolution, either for himself or for his Kingdom, than when he was prompted by base and unreasonable Avarice and Ingratitude to despise and set so low a Price on our Labours and our Blood; and also to demonstrate to those who imagined their Service of sufficient Merit to deprive us of our Bread, that the Lanskenets are no Match for the Swiss; and that though they have the same Language, and the same Discipline, Discipline, yet they have not the same <sup>A. D.</sup> Valour and Fierceness. The only Diffi- <sup>1513.</sup> culty will be to seize the Artillery ; but this will be alleviated by its not being planted within a fortified Place, by attacking it unexpectedly, by the Darknes of the Night, by the Fury of the Assault, and by the very small Space of Time which it will have to annoy us, and that too interrupted by the Tumult, Disorder, and sudden Confusion. The other Business of the Field will be dispatched with the greatest Ease ; the Horse will not venture to come and run themselves upon our Pikes, much less will the despicable Rabble of French and Gascon Foot dare to come to close Engagement with us. In this Resolution our Prudence will be no less conspicuous than our Valour. Our Nation is arrived to such a Pitch of Renown, that the Glory of our Name can no longer be supported but by attempting something beyond Expectation and the ordinary Reach of Men. And since we are now about Novara, the Place itself admonishes us that we have no other Means to wipe off that antient Reproach which we incurred

A. D. in the Service of Lodovico Sforza at this 1513. same Novara. Let us go on then boldly with the Help of God Almighty, who is the Punisher of Schismatics, Excommunicated, and Enemies to his Name ; let us go to a Victory, if we behave like Men, secure and easy ; a Victory, in which the greater the Danger it shall appear to carry with it, the greater and more glorious will be the Name of the Swiss, and the more we are exceeded by the Enemy in Number, the more shall we enrich ourselves by their Spoils.”

AT this Speech of Mottino all the Troops gave a fierce Shout, and every one stretched forth his Arm in token of Approbation of what he had said*. The General, after promising them a certain Victory, ordered them to go to their Repose, and take care of themselves, that they might be in Readiness at Beat of Drum to repair to their Colours. The Nation of the Swiss never

* The Learned observe, that in military Assemblies lifting up the Hands, and stretching out the Arm are Signs of Approbation and Consent. So we often read in of what was proposed to them, to lift up their Hands.

never took a prouder or bolder Resolution, A. D.
 Few against Many, without Cavalry or <sup>1513.</sup> Artillery against an Army very strong in <sup>Bold Re-</sup> both, and not induced by any Necessity, <sup>solution of</sup> for Novara was freed from Danger, and <sup>the Swiss.</sup> they expected the next Day a considerable Reinforcement. They voluntarily chose to try a Measure attended with less Security but greater Hopes of Glory, before another which would be more secure but less glorious in the Event.

ON the Sixth Day of June, then, after Midnight, the Swiss in a very boisterous Manner marched out of Novara, in Num- <sup>Battle of</sup> ber about Ten Thousand, and disposed in <sup>Novara.</sup> such Order that Seven Thousand were to attack the Artillery, about which were the Quarters of the German Infantry, and the rest to post themselves with their Pikes upright, opposite to the Men at Arms. The French had not fortified their Camp on account of the Shortness of Time, and because they had no Apprehensions of so quick and sudden a Visit. At the first Alarm therefore given by the Centinels of the Approach of the Enemy, the Suddenness

A. D. 1513. denness of the Accident, with the Darkness of the Night, concurred to increase the Confusion and Terror. The Men at Arms, however, soon assembled and formed themselves into Squadrons, and the Ger- man Foot, followed by the rest of the Infantry, quickly got into Rank, and presented themselves in Order of Battle.
The Artillery was now discharged with a horrible Noise against the Swiss that went to attack it, making a terrible Slaughter among them, which might be perceived by the Cries and Roarings of the Men more than by the Benefit of Sight, the Use of which was as yet prevented by the Night. The Swiss however with incredible Resolution, not regarding present Death, nor terrified at the Fate of those who fell by their Side, marched with all possible Speed against the Artillery, where being arrived, they entered into a most furious Engagement with the Ger- man Infantry, both Parties combating with the greatest Rage, which was still inflamed with Hatred and a Desire of Glory. You might have seen, as now the Sun began to appear, now one Side giving giving Way, now the other, oftentimes that Party to get the Advantage which at first seemed to be worsted; on the same Side, and at the same Time, some giving Way, others advancing forwards, some resisting with Difficulty, others violently pressing upon and insulting the Enemy, while every Place was full of Dead, Wounded, and Blood. The Officers sometimes most valiantly discharged the Office of common Soldiers, striking the Enemy, and defending themselves and their Men; sometimes they most prudently performed the Duties of their Station, encouraging, providing, succouring, disposing, and commanding. On another Part the Men at Arms stood quietly in their Armour without striking a Stroke, for their Fears operated so strongly upon them, that all the Authority, Encouragements, Commands, Intreaties, Exclamations and Threatenings of Tremouille and Trivulzi could not inspire them with Boldness sufficient to charge the Enemy, whom they had in their Front; and the Swiss thought they did enough in keeping them confined, and preventing them from

defeated.
 from succouring their Infantry. At last in so fierce a Conflict, and so great Valour shown on both Sides, Victory declared for the Swiss, who with irresistible Force made themselves Masters of the Artillery, and turned it against their Enemies, who by that Means and by their Valour were put to Flight. With the Foot fled also the Men at Arms, in whom appeared no military Virtue, nor any thing that deserved Praise; only Ruberto della Marcia, prompted by paternal Affection, entered with a Squadron among the Swiss, to save his two Sons Floranges and Denesio, Captains of German Foot, who lay on the Ground covered with Wounds, and fought with such Ardor and Fierceness, that, to the great Amazement of the Swiss themselves, he brought them both alive out of so great a Danger. The Battle lasted two Hours with very considerable Loss on both Sides; of the Swiss were killed about Fifteen Hundred, among whom was Mottino, the Author of so glorious a Resolution, who while he was fighting received a Thrust with a Pike in the Throat. The Loss of their

Enemies

Enemies was much greater, some make <sup>A. D.</sup> it Ten Thousand, but the greater Part of <sup>1513.</sup> the Germans were killed in fighting, whereas most of the French and Gascon Foot perished in their Flight. The Cavalry escaped almost intire, and were in no Danger of Pursuit from the Swiss, who if they had been provided with Horses might have easily dispersed them, so great was the Terror in which they fled out of the Field. The victorious Army remained Masters of all the Carriages with Twenty-two Pieces of heavy Cannon, and all the Horses that belonged to the Train of Artillery. The Swiss returned in a triumphant Manner the same Day to Novara, with such universal Honour and Renown, that many who considered the Magnanimity of the Resolution, the most manifest Contempt of Death, the Fierceness of the Fight, and the Felicity of the Success, did not scruple to prefer this Action to almost all the memorable Facts that are recorded of the antient Romans and Greeks. The French fled into Piedmont, from whence, Trivulzio in vain exclaiming against it, they im-

AFTER the Victory Milan and the other Towns that had adhered to the French sent to demand Pardon, which was granted on condition of paying a certain Sum of Money, the Milaneſe in particular Twenty Thouſand Ducats, and the reſt according to their Abilities; all which was paid away to the Swiſs, who ought in Juſtice to reap the Profit as well as the Glory of a Victory obtained by their Valour, and with their Blood. In order to collect as much Money as could be had, the Swiſs after this entered the Marquiſate of Monferrato, and Piedmont, which were accused of entertaining the French Army, and partly by Plunder, partly by Contributions, tho' abſtaining from all Acts of Violence to Life and Honour, raiſed vaſt Sums on the miſerable People. Nor were the Spaniards wholly excluded from the Rewards of the Victory; for after the Battle Janus and Ottaviano Fregoſi, the former of whom had been lately driven out of Genoa, and each

each aspired to be Doge, having applied <sup>A. D.</sup> to the Viceroy, he preferred Ottaviano, <sup>1513.</sup> for whom also the Pontiff highly interested himself on account of their old Friendship, and received from him a Promise to pay him Fifty Thousand Ducats as soon as he had entered Genoa. The Viceroy then, after furnishing Ottaviano with Three Thousand Foot under the Marquis of Pescara, moved with the rest of the Army to Chiesleggio, shewing himself ready to proceed further if Occasion required. But as soon as the Marquis with Ottaviano approached Genoa, the Brothers Adorni, conscious of their Inability to resist, left the Place, into which Ottaviano made his Entrance, and was created Doge of that City, which in the same Year saw itself under the Government of the French, Janus Fregoso, the Adorni, and Ottaviano.

BUT Bartolomeo Alviano, as soon as he had received Advice of the Defeat of the French Army, being apprehensive that the Spaniards would immediately march in Pursuit of him, retired in all Haste to

A. D. Ponte Vico, leaving for the more Speed <sup>1513.</sup> some Pieces of Cannon that were flow of Carriage on the Road. From Ponte Vico, leaving Renzo da Ceri in Crema, and abandoning Brescia, because it was of no Service to diminish the Army, in which remained but Six Hundred Men at Arms, One Thousand light Horse, and Five Thousand Foot, he continued his March with the same Expedition, and under such Dread and Disaffection of the Country, that, had he been pursued by any small Party, his Troops would have been broken and routed by themselves, till he arrived at Tomba near the Adice, not having given himself Time to rest in any Place, but merely so long as he was constrained by Necessity for the Refreshment of the Men and Horses. At Tomba he halted, and laying aside all Fear, because he was not pursued, got together as great a Quantity of Provisions as he could draw from the Veronese, and took care to have it conveyed to Padoua and Trevigi. At the same time he sent Gian Pagolo Baglione with Sixty Men at Arms and Twelve Hundred Foot to Lignago, where he

he was immediately received by the Men <sup>A. D.</sup> of the Town, which had no Garrison, <sup>1513.</sup> and stormed the Castle, in which were One Hundred and Fifty Spanish and German Foot, after he had first battered it on the Side that looks towards the Square. In the Success of the Assault it is difficult to say whether Fortune or Valour had the greater Share; for during the Attack a Fire got hold of the Stores, occasioned by some Instruments of artificial Fires thrown <sup>Lignago taken by the Venetians.</sup> by the Besiegers, and burnt Part of the Castle, in which Confusion the Enemy partly through the Breach and partly by Scaling-Ladders entered the Place, took the Spanish Governor, and killed or took Prisoners all the rest.

LIGNAGO being thus taken Alviano laid a Bridge over the Adice, and being <sup>Verona</sup> put in Hopes by some Veronese of an In-<sup>attempted in vain by</sup> surrection against the Germans went and <sup>Alviano.</sup> encamped at San Giovanni four Miles from Verona, from whence the next Morning he approached the Gate of San Martino, and planting his Cannon play'd with great Fury on the Turret of the Gate, and the

A. D. 1513. contiguous Wall, expecting in the mean Time some Tumult to arise in the City. The Breach in the Wall being Forty Braces wide, and the Turret thrown down, which fell in such a Manner as to make a very strong Fence before the Gate, the Assault was given with great Fury. But in Verona were Three Hundred Horse, and Three Thousand German Foot under Roccandolph, a General Officer of great Reputation, who made a valiant Defence. The Breach in the Wall being of a good Height from the Ground on the Inside, and the Veronese making no Movement in Favour of the Venetians, as it was hoped, Alviano seeing it would be difficult to take the Place, called off his Troops from the Wall, and had begun to draw off his Cannon; but changing his Mind in a Moment, on receiving, as it was supposed, some Message from the Inhabitants, he made his Soldiers return to the Wall, and gave a fresh Assault more vigorous than the first, but met with the same Difficulties as before, and the same Remissness in those who had recalled him. Casting off therefore all Hopes

Hopes of Success, with the Loss of above <sup>A. D.</sup> Two Hundred of his Men, among whom <sup>1513.</sup> was Tommaso Fabbro of Ravenna, Captain of Foot, he drew off his Artillery from the Walls with wonderful Speed, and returned the same Day to his Camp from which he had set out in the Morning, having acquired no Reputation from the Counsel or Event of that Day, but he was highly celebrated through all Italy for his Quickness, in doing as much in one Day as other Generals used to do with Difficulty in three or four. After this he laid waste the Territory of Verona, to try whether the Fear of seeing their Country desolate would constrain the Veronese to come to some Agreement.

BUT now the Spanish Army was advancing forwards; for the Viceroy on Advice of the Loss of Lignago being apprehensive that Verona, through the Disaffection of the Citizens, would open its Gates to the Venetians, as he was no longer retarded by the Affairs of Genoa, which had taken a happy Turn, now resolved to succour without Delay the de-

A. D. 1513. clining Interests of Cæsar. For this End having passed the Po at Stradella, and taken Possession without Difficulty of the Cities of Bergamo and Brescia and the Town of Peschiera by their Surrendry, he laid Siege to the Castle of this last Place, in which was a Garrison of Two Hundred and Fifty Foot, and tho' the Place was generally expected to hold out some Days, he took it at once with Sword in Hand, making the Venetian Proveditor, with those of the Garrison that remained alive Prisoners. Alviano at the Approach of the Spaniards retired to Albere on the other Side of the Adice, and to increase his Army as much as possible, not only recalled some Foot that were in the Polesine of Rovigo, but those whom he had left in Lignago. And soon after the German Foot joining the Viceroy at San Martino, and marching after they had recovered Lignago to Montagnana, the Venetians, who had nothing left in these Parts but Padoua and Trevigi, attended only to the Preservation of these Cities, and appointed the Army to be distributed between them. In Trevigi they placed a Garrison of Two Hundred Men at Arms, <sup>A. D.</sup> Three Hundred light Horfe, and Two <sup>1513.</sup> Thousand Foot under Gian Pagolo Baglione, assisted by Malatesta da Sogliano, and the Chevalier della Volpe. Alviano with the rest of the Army took up his Quarters <sup>Alviano</sup> in Padoua, where he employed himself <sup>fortifies</sup> in fortifying the Place, repairing the <sup>Padoua.</sup> Bastions that had been erected, and perfecting many Works that were left unfinished; and that the Enemy might not be able to approach the Place without extreme Danger and Difficulty, and without a vast Number of Pioneers, he demolished all the Houses, and felled all the Trees within three Miles of Padoua.

WHILE the military Operations pro- <sup>Pope Leo</sup> ceeded in this Manner, the Pope used his <sup>seeks to</sup> utmost Care and Diligence for extirpating <sup>extirpate</sup> the Division made in the Church by the <sup>the Schism</sup> Pisan Council; and that Affair depending wholly on the Will of the King of France, he employed abundance of Arts for softening the Mind of that Prince, assuring him that the Report of his sending Money to the Swiss was utterly false, protesting

A. D. 1513. that he desired nothing but Peace, and to be the common Father of all Christian Princes, and that he was extremely grieved that his Majesty, by his Dissention from the Church, had deprived him of the Power of demonstrating to him how much he was by Nature inclined to be his Friend, and that he was necessitated for the Honour of the Apostolic See, and of his own proper Person, to proceed separately with him till he was returned to the Obedience of the Roman Church, when it would be lawful for him to receive him as a most Christian King, and to embrace him as the eldest Son of the Church.

THE King was desirous, for his own Sake, of a Union of his Kingdom with the Church, which was earnestly demanded by all the People, and by the whole Court, and to which he was mightily stimulated by the Queen; he knew also that he could never hope to agree with the Pope in temporal Concerns, if the spiritual Differences were not first composed. Trusting therefore, or pretending tending to trust, to the Pope's Words, he <sup>A. D.</sup> deputed the Bishop of Marfeilles his Am- <sup>1513.</sup> bassador to treat with his Holiness about these Affairs. On his Arrival at Rome, the Pontiff caused, by a Decree of the Council, the French Bishops, and other Prelates, to be restored to the Power of purging themselves from Contumacy during the whole Month of November next. The late Pope had proceeded very rigorously against these Reverend Dignitaries as Schismatics by way of Monitory. And the same Morning in which the Decree was ordered, a Paper was read in the Council, subscribed by Bernardino Carvagiale and Federigo da San Severino, in which, not styling themselves Cardinals, they approved of all that was done in the Lateran Council, promising to adhere to that Council, and to obey the Pope, and by consequence confessed that their Deprivation of the Cardinalship made by Julius, and confirmed by the said Council before his Decease, was lawful and right. The Restitution of these Prelates had been under Debate before, but delayed by the Opposition of the Ambassadors

A. D. 1513. dors of the Emperor, and King of Ara- gon, and of the Cardinals of Sion and York, who exclaimed against it as an Act unworthy of the Majesty of the Apostolic See, and of very bad Example, to grant Pardon to the Authors of a Crime so pernicious, and full of abominable Impiety, putting the Consistory in Mind of the Constancy of Julius, who retained his just Resentment against them, from no other Motive than the public Good, to his last Moments.

BUT the Pontiff, inclining to the more merciful Side, judged it easier utterly to extinguish the Name of the Pisan Council by Clemency than by Rigour, and was not willing to exasperate the King of France, who earnestly interceded for the Delinquents; besides, he was not hindered in his good Intentions by any private Malice, for the Offence was not committed against him, nay, he himself and his Brothers had been intimate Acquaintance of Federigo before his Pontificate. For these Reasons, following his own Judgment, he had caused to be read before the Fathers of the Council a Paper of the deprived Cardinals containing containing their Humiliation, and afterwards appointed a Day for their Restitution, which was transacted in the following Order. Bernardino and Federigo entered Rome privately by Night without the Habit and Ensigns of Cardinals, and next Morning being appointed to present themselves before the Pope sitting in Consistory, accompanied by all the Cardinals except Sion and York, who refused to be present, they first passed along, clothed like simple Priests with black Bonnets on their Heads, through all the public Places of the Palace of the Vatican in which they had lodged the Night before, a vast Multitude of People flocking to see them, and every one saying that so public a Disgrace must needs be a stinging Rebuke to the excessive Pride of Bernardino, and to the no less immoderate Arrogance of Federigo. Being admitted into the Consistory, falling on their Knees with Marks of the greatest Humility, they asked Pardon of the Pope and Cardinals, testifying their Approbation of what had been transacted by Julius, and particularly their own Deprivation, and the Election of a new Pontiff, as done canonically, Ceremony of restoring the schismatic Cardinals.

When an authentic Copy of this their Confession, signed with their Names, had been entered upon Record, they rose on their Feet, did Reverence, and embraced all the Cardinals, who stirred not from their Seats; after which they were vested in the Habit of Cardinals, and admitted to sit in the same Order in which they had sat before their Deprivation. By this Act they recovered only the Dignity of the Cardinalship, but not the Churches and other Revenues which they used to enjoy, for these had been long before disposed of to others as Vacancies.

IN this Transaction the Pope satisfied, if not wholly yet in a great Measure, the King of France, but he did not satisfy him in other Actions, for he was solicitous to procure an Agreement between the Emperor and the Venetians, which from the present Circumstances of Affairs seemed not difficult to be accomplished; it being believed that Cæsar, invited by fair Opportunities beyond the Mountains, was inclined clined to ease himself of this Burden, A. D. that he might the more readily attend to <sup>1513.</sup> the Recovery of Burgundy for his Grandson. And there were much more Grounds to hope that Peace was the Desire of the Venetians, who were terrified at the Defeat of the French, and knew that the King of France, on account of the Multiplicity of Dangers that threatened his own Kingdom, had laid aside all Thoughts of Italy for the present Year. They perceived that the Spanish Army was approaching, and that it was to join the Troops which were in Verona; they found themselves exhausted of Money, weak in Soldiers, especially in Foot, and obliged to stand the Brunt alone, without the least Glimmerings of approaching Light to dispel their gloomy Apprehensions; and yet the Senate very constantly answered to all Proposals, that they would come to no Accommodation without the Restitution of Vicenza and Verona.

and tho' the Demand was very disagreeable to the Pontiff, who doubted that by granting it he should disgust the King of France, and did not comprehend how it could answer any Purpose of Cæsar or of himself to give Umbrage to the Venetians in a Matter of so small Importance, yet the Emperor obstinately persisting in his Importunity, he sent him the Number desired under the Command of Troilo Savello, Achille Torello, and Mutio Colonna, not chusing by a Refusal to shew any Sign that he did not intend to continue in the Confederacy contracted by the late Pontiff, and not thinking himself restrained by any Obligation to the Venetians, who, besides suffering their Troops, when Alviano lay at Cremona, in no very friendly Manner, to go marauding over the Parmesan and Piacentine, had never appointed any Ambassadors to pay him Obedience, according to antient Custom, till the French had been defeated, and had repassed the Mountains.

THIS Step of the Pontiff alarmed the Venetians, not so much for the Importance tance of such a Succour as out of an A. D.

 Apprehension that this was but a Prelude <sup>1513.</sup> to much further Proceedings, taking it as a most evident Sign that his Holiness never intended to separate himself from their Enemies. They made no Alteration however in their first Resolutions, but, being rather disposed to brave Fortune as well as they could, sent Orders to their Proveditor of marine Affairs, who lay at Corfu, to assemble as many Ships as he could, and attack the maritime Towns of Puglia. But soon afterwards reflecting on the important Consequence of so highly provoking the King of Aragon, a powerful Prince, and who had always appeared to advise Cæsar to an Agreement, they countermanded those Orders, as the Result of Animosity rather than of Prudence. The Viceroy lay encamped at Montagnana, undetermined as yet what he was to undertake; for the Germans were in high Expectations, the Enterprises on Padoua or Trevigi, which only remained on Hand, were difficult, and the Forces were much inferior to the Difficulties; for the whole Army consisted of no more than

PREPARATIONS were alſo making much about the ſame Time for raiſing new Diſturbances in Genoa, in compliance with the Inclinations of the Duke of Milan and the Swiſs, to whom Antoniotto and Gieronimo Adorni had Recourſe ; put-putting the Duke in Mind of the Dependancy of their Fathers on his Father Lodovico, who by the Assistance of the Adorni had recovered, and many Years enjoyed in Peace the Dominion of Genoa, of which he had been treacherously deprived by the Doges of the Family of the Fregosi: That the Adorni had also a Share in the Misfortunes of the Sforzas, for at the same Time that Lodovico lost the Dutchy of Milan the Adorni were driven out of Genoa; it seemed reasonable therefore that they should in like manner partake of their good Fortune, since there remained the same Affection, and the same Fidelity: That they were not to be charged with the Fault, if, being destitute of all Hope, and finding none to hearken to them, they had at last, not out of Choice but Necessity, had Recourse to that King by whom they had before been expelled: On the other Side he ought not to forget the inveterate Hatred of the Fregosi, and the Multiplicity of injurious and fraudulent Practices with which his Father had been abused by Battista and the Cardinal, both of that Family, and 1513. consider also how it could be proper to put any Confidence in Ottaviano Fregoso, who, besides his inveterate Enmity, had refused to have a Superior in that City.

 To the Swiss they had proposed the powerful Incentives of Profit, Safety, and Honour; to pay them, if by their Assistance they should be restored to their Country, the same Sum of Money that Fregoso had paid to the Spaniards. They represented to them that as the Dutchy of Milan had been preserved by their Valour, so to them also belonged its Protection; they ought to consider therefore how inconsistent it would be with the Security of that State for Genoa, a neighbouring City, and of such Importance, to be under the Dominion of a Doge dependent on the King of Aragon; that it would be greatly unworthy of their Name and of their Glory to suffer Genoa, the Fruits of the Victory of Novara, to fall a Prize to the Covetousness of the Spaniards, who, while the Swiss marched with so much Resolution to the Mouths of the French Cannon, or, to speak more properly, ran to meet Death, sat idle on the Trebbia, keeping themselves on the Watch, and prepared, according to the Event of the Battle, either to fly like Cowards, or fraudulently steal away the Fruits of a Victory obtained by the Blood of others. These Representations had such an Effect, that the Duke put his Troops in Motion, and the Swiss were ready to march with Four Thousand Foot; but the Threats of the Viceroy against the Duke, and the Authority of the Pontiff, who had the Interests of Ottaviano very much at Heart, put a Stop to their Proceedings.

IN the mean time the Viceroy took his March to Battaglia, a Place seven Miles distant from Padoua, where Bernardino Carvagiale, inconsiderately advancing with a few Horse to view the Situation of the Country, was taken by Mercurio, Commander of the Venetian light Horse. The Bishop of Goritz being now arrived in the Army, a Council was held on the future Operations, in which Goritz proposed the Siege of Padoua, representing that so great a Dependence might justly be laid on the Valour of the Germans and Spaniards, when exerted against Italians, that it was to be hoped they would in the End surmount all Difficulties; that the Conquest of Trevigi would indeed be somewhat less laborious, but the Advantage to be reaped from it was very different, for to become Master of Trevigi alone conduced but little to a Decision of the War, but the Acquisition of Padoua would entirely secure the Towns subject to the Emperor from all Insults and Dangers of War, and deprive the Venetians of all Hopes of ever retrieving their Losses. The Viceroy was of a different Opinion, as were almost all the other General Officers, judging it rather impossible than difficult to force Padoua, because of its Fortifications, which were almost incredible; it was also extremely well provided with Artillery and all Things necessary for its Defence, and had a very numerous Garrison, among whom were arrived, as at other Times, a good Number of the noble Youth of Venice. The Town itself, they said, was of a very large large Compass, and upon that Account, A. D. with the Multitude of Defendants, and <sup>1513.</sup> other Difficulties, it required two good Armies to surround and besiege it; which was so far from being the Case at present, that they were not able so much as to form one considerable Army, the Number of Soldiers not being great, and of these, the Germans especially, who used to be very uneasy under slow Payments, not being over zealous for the Service; that besides they did not abound with Ammunition, and laboured under a Scarcity of Pioneers, whose Service was very necessary for carrying on so difficult a Siege.

BUT the Reasons alledged by the Viceroy and others were at last obliged to <sup>Second</sup> give Way to the Will and Pleasure of the <sup>Siege of</sup> Bishop of Goritz, pursuant to which the <sup>Padoua.</sup> Army drew nearer to Padoua, and posted itself at Bassanello, on the Right of the Canal, within a Mile and Half of the City. But the Camp in that Place being pretty much annoyed by some double Cannon planted on a Bastion of the Town, the Troops passed the Canal, and encamped at a somewhat farther Distance from the Place, from whence they ordered some Foot to take Post at the Church of Sant' Antonio within half a Mile of Padoua, and, in order to make their Approaches with less Danger, set themselves at Work in casting up Trenches towards the Gate of Sant' Antonio. But the Works were very great, and in a Country whence all the Inhabitants were fled there was an extreme Want of Pioneers; so that the Trenches advanced but slowly, and not without Danger, the Workmen being greatly incommoded Day and Night by frequent and sudden Sallies. To this was added a Dearth of Provisions; for as but a small Part of the Town was surrounded by the Besiegers, the Stradiotti, having free Liberty to sally from the other Parts of the City, ranged over the Country at Discretion, and intercepted all Convoys designed for the Camp, which were also prevented by some armed Boats, which the Venetians had manned for that Purpose on the River Adice; for the Crews were continually landing in one Part or other, and infested all the open Country. A. D.

THE Viceroy beset with these Difficulties, and laying the State of Affairs once more before a Council, every one freely gave his Opinion that it would be less disgraceful to correct a Resolution imprudently taken by raising the Siege, than by persisting in an Error to give Occasion for greater Loss, attended with greater Shame and Reproach. This Opinion being reported by the Viceroy, in the Presence of many of the General Officers, to Goritz, who had refused to be present at the Council, he answered that, as the military Art was not his Profession, he was not ashamed to confess his Want of Judgment in Affairs relating to War, and tho' he had advised the Siege of Padoua he was not prompted to it by trusting to himself in that Resolution, but by trusting and following the Authority of the Viceroy, who both by Letters and by private Messengers had several times advised Cæsar to the Undertaking, and given him mighty Hopes of Success. At length, as Com-

gamo in order to collect Money, he detached thither a Party of Three Hundred Horse and Five Hundred Foot, who took the Commissary, together with the Castle whither he was fled, and the Money that he had gathered, the Place having very few Defendants. In order to recover Bergamo there marched out of Milan Sixty Men at Arms, Three Hundred light Horse, and Seven Hundred Foot, with Two Thousand Men of the Mountain of Brianza, under Silvio Savello and Cesare Fieramosca, who in their March meeting with Five Hundred light Horse, and Three Hundred Foot, ordered by Renzo for Bergamo, easily put them to Flight, on which the others who were before in Possession of Bergamo abandoned it, only leaving a Garrison in the Castle, called Capella, that stands on a Mountain without the Town.

THE Viceroy and the Bishop of Goritz stayed some Days at Vicenza, and sent Part of the Spaniards under Prospero Colonna to pillage Basciano and Marostico, not for any Fault, but that the Substance

 of these unhappy People might go as far as possible towards the Maintenance of the Army, which wanted their Pay; for Cæsar always laboured under the same Difficulties, the King of Aragon was not able to support so great a Burden alone, and the Dutchy of Milan, excessively burdened by the Swiss, was incapable of contributing towards the Assistance of others. The Army was vastly incommoded in its Quarters at Vicenza by the continual Molestations of the Enemy's light Horse, who scoured all the Country Night and Day, and intercepted all Convoys of Provisions, not attended with a strong Guard, in which, because they had but very few light Horse, they were obliged to employ their Men at Arms.
Goritz therefore, to avoid this Vexation, marched off with the German Foot to Verona, much dissatisfied with the Viceroy, who following him by easy Journeys halted at Albere on the Adice, where he rested some Days to give the Veronese an Opportunity to gather in their Corn and their Vintage, but not able to restrain the who carried off the Oxen belonging to the Artillery from the Germans under the very Gates of Verona. A. D. 1513.

THE Viceroy had intended to distribute the Army into Quarters in the Brescian and Bergamasco, and at the same time to distress Crema, the only Place possessed by the Venetians beyond the Mincio; and the Report of his Design being spread, the Inhabitants of the adjacent Countries thought themselves secure, so that the Padouan was full of People and Goods. On this Consideration the Viceroy, who had no other Means of maintaining his Army than by Plunder, altered his Purpose, and sending for the German Foot marched to Montagnana and Este, whence he proceeded to the Village of Bovolenta, which, after making a vast Booty of Cattle, the Soldiers burnt with many stately Seats in that Neighbourhood. From Bovolenta, allured by a Desire of Plunder, and emboldened by knowing that the Venetian Troops were distributed into Garrisons at Padoua and Trevigi, the Viceroy took a Resolution, tho' contrary to Ravages the Venetian Territory.

A. D. 1513. to the Advice of Prospero Colonna, who censured it as rash and dangerous, to approach Venice. Passing therefore the River Bacchiglione, he pillaged Pieve di Sacco, a populous and plentiful Borough, after which he proceeded to Mestri, and from thence he arrived at Marghera on the Salt Water, where, to render the Memory of this Expedition the more famous, he discharged ten Pieces of heavy Artillery towards Venice, the Balls of which reached the Monastery of the Temple of San Secondo. At the same time the Troops plundered and laid waste the whole Country, from whence all the Inhabitants were fled, and very unfairly made War against the Walls; for not being satisfied with the vast Booty of Animals and Moveables, they burnt, in a most barbarous Manner, Mestri, Marghera, and Lizzasusina, with all the Towns and Villages in the Country, besides every House of more than ordinary Beauty and Appearance. In these Devastations the Savageness of the Pope's Soldiers and of the other Italians distinguished itself as much as that of the Barbarians, and was the more unpardonable in in them, us they unnaturally spent their A. D.

 Fury and Malice in defacing the Magnifi- <sup>1513.</sup> cence, and destroying the Ornaments of their own Country.*

BUT in Venice, when from the Smoke by Day, and the Flames by Night, the Inhabitants discerned the Burning of their Country Seats and Palaces, and heard in their own Houses and Habitations the thundering Noise of the Cannon, which was planted on Purpose to render their Disgrace the more notorious, it was impossible to express the public Indignation and Grief, every one taking to Heart, and bitterly regretting beyond Measure so dismal a Change of Fortune, that instead of so many Victories obtained both in Italy and foreign Parts, by Land as well as Sea, in Times past, they now saw a little Army,
 in

* Mutio Colonna was first detached with some Squadrons of Horse and a good Body of Germans to Mestri, where he took the Town and Castle, putting all the Defendants to the Sword, after which the Viceroy and Colonna advanced thither with the whole Army. Lissafusina, which is the Place where Vessels are halled by Windlasses out of the Brenta into the Adriatic Sea, was plundered by Troilo Savello, who also was the first that passed the Brenta, and made a large Booty of Cattle. Giovio.

A. D. in Comparifon of their antient Forces and 1513. Power, fo fiercely and in fo outrageous a Manner infult the Name of fo glorious a Republic. Provoked by fuch Indignities the Senate, which was hitherto determined not to try the Fortune of a Battle, whatever Hopes of Succefs might be offered, now changed its Refolution, and consented to the preffing Importunities of Bartolomeo d'Alviano that they would give him Leave to affemble all the Soldiers, raife all the Peafants of the Plains and of the Mountains, and endeavour to intercept the Retreat of the Enemy. This Attempt was represented by Alviano as very eafy, becaufe having rashly advanced fo far beyond their Bounds, and got into the Middle between Venice, Trevigi and Padoua, it was impoffible for them, efpecially as they were encumbered with fo much Plunder, to retire without very great Danger, on account of the Inconveniencies of procuring Subfiftence, and the Obftacles of Rivers and difficult Paffes. The Spaniards were now fenfible of the Preparations on Foot againft them, and haftening their March were arrived at Cittadella, but were prevented prevented from taking Possession of it by <sup>A. D.</sup> the Entrance of a good Number of Sol- <sup>1513.</sup> diers into the Place. They took up their Quarters therefore under Cittadella by the Side of the Brenta, in order to proceed to Villa Conticella, at which Place the River was fordable; but they were deterred from attempting the Passage by Alviano, who had posted himself on the other Side with Troops drawn up in Order, and had planted Cannon along the Bank of the River, carefully providing not only for the Defence of that Place, but of several others, which would have been easy to be passed without Resistance. The Viceroy continually making a Show as if he designed to pass the River at the Part below, to which Alviano had bent all his Forces, passed it the next Night without Resistance at the Pass of Nuovacroce three Miles above Cittadella, whence he directed his March with great Speed towards Vicenza. But Alviano resolving to oppose his Passage of the River Bacchiglione prevented him, and near to Vicenza was joined by Two Hundred and Fifty Men at Arms and Two Thousand Foot from Trevigi under Gian Pagolo

A. D. Pagolo Baglione and Andrea Gritti: It.
 1513. } was the Intention of the Venetian Generals not to engage the Enemy, who were making towards Vicenza, in a pitched Battle in an open Place, but by guarding the strong Passes, and advantageous Posts; to prevent their Passage to whatever Quarter they turned. For this Purpose they had sent Gian Pagolo Manfrone with Four Thousand Militia to Montecchio, and Five Hundred Horse with a Multitude of other Peasants to Barberano to stop the Passage of the Mountains, and had caused the Peasants to possess themselves of all the Passes that lead to Germany, and to fortify them with Ditches, Trenches and Stones, and with Trees thrown across the Roads. Alviano left Teodoro da Trivulzi with a sufficient Garrison in Vicenza, and he himself with the rest of the Army posted himself at Olmo, a Place two Miles distant from Vicenza on the Road that leads to Verona, blocking up that Pass and another near it with Trenches, Ditches, and Artillery disposed in proper Places in such a Manner that it was almost impossible to pass that Way. The Road then which the Spaniards designed to take towards Verona being thus stopped up, it was difficult also for those who marched along by the Mountains to extend themselves in a marshy Country, full of Pools of Water; and it was no less difficult and hazardous to take the narrow Way over the Mountains, which was guarded by a Multitude of armed Men. As they were thus surrounded with Enemies on all Sides, in Front, Flank and Rear, and continually harrailed by great Numbers of light Horse, and could come to no Resolution but what was attended with Difficulty, and much Hazard, when Night came on, after skirmishing a while, they took up their Quarters within half a Mile of the Venetians. The Generals, after holding a Council of War in the Night on the best Method to extricate themselves from such pressing Difficulties and Dangers, resolved, as least hazardous, to take the Road to Germany, in order to return to Verona by the Way of Trent, though they were under strong Apprehensions that, on account of the Length of the March, and the small Garri-son they had left in the Place, the Ve-

A. D. netians would prevent them, and enter the <sup>1513.</sup> Town before they could arrive. At Break of Day they put themselves in Motion towards Bassano, turning their Backs to the Enemy; which above all things disheartens and is pernicious to an Army; and though they marched in Order with so little Hopes of Safety that they thought the Loss of their Baggage and their least serviceable Horses the smallest Misfortune that was like to befall them, Alviano did not very quickly perceive their Decampment, which was made in great Silence, without Sound of Trumpet, or Beat of Drum, and a very thick Fog that happened that Morning intercepted all Prospect. But as soon as he had discovered that they were gone he hastened to follow them with all his Army, in which, it was said, were a Thousand Men at Arms, a Thousand Stradiotti, and Six Thousand Foot, harraßing them on every Quarter with the Stradiotti, and an infinite Number of Peasants who descended from the Mountains, and annoyed the Enemy with Harquebuses. Hence the Dangers in the March still increased as well as the Difficulties, which were augmented mented by the Multitude of Carriages, <sup>A. D.</sup> and the vast Body of Cattle which they <sup>1513.</sup> drove, and because they proceeded thro' narrow Roads between Ditches, which they had not the Conveniency of widening by levelling the Ground. But tho' they marched a great Pace they kept themselves in firm Order by the Goodness of the Troops, and the diligent Inspection of the Officers; and yet after they had proceeded in this distressed Condition about two Miles, they could not themselves but think it very difficult to hold out much longer. But the Rashness of the Enemies would not suffer them to wait with Patience the Maturity of so fair an Opportunity, which was almost brought to Perfection. Alviano incapable, as he always was, of restraining himself, attacked, not <sup>Battle of</sup> in a tumultuous Manner, but with his <sup>Vicenza.</sup> Army drawn up in Order of Battle, and with Cannon, the Rearguard of the Enemy commanded by Prospero Colonna. It is reported for a Truth that Alviano delaying to engage was very sharply reprimanded by Loredano, one of the Proveditors, for not charging the Enemies, but suffering

A. D. 1513. ing them, when now they were already discomfited, to march off in Safety.

These Reproaches were so provoking to a General of such extraordinary Fierceness, that he hurried himself into precipitate Measures, and in a Rage gave the Signal of Battle. Others ascribe the Cause of the Engagement to Prospero Colonna, by whose Advice the Viceroy chose rather to try the uncertain Fortune of the Field, than to act otherwise in Dependance on the slender Hopes he could entertain of saving himself. They add that when the Viceroy gave the Signal for returning towards Vicenza, Alviano had posted Gian Pagolo Baglione with the Troops arrived from Trevigi, in the Suburbs of that City, and he himself with the rest of the Army had taken Post at Creatia, two Miles from Vicenza, where was a little Hill from whence he could conveniently do Execution upon the Enemy with his Cannon. At the Foot of this Hill was a Valley capable of an Army in Battle Array, but accessible only by one narrow Road near the Hills, and almost surrounded by Marshes; this Place Prospero knew to be very incommodious for the

the Enemy, and advised to attack them A. D. on that Side. However it were Prospero 1513. began the Fight with much Valour, and sent to hasten the Viceroy who commanded the main Battle; and the Spanish Infantry on one Side, and the German on the other, under the Command of the Marquis of Pescara, moving at the same Time, they attacked the Venetians with such vast Impetuosity that they could not stand the Shock, but were broken and put to Flight almost in an Instant. For the Foot not sustaining the Fury of the first Venetians defeated. Onset threw their Pikes on the Ground, and immediately began to fly in a most shameful Manner, the Regiment of Romagna, of which Babone di Naldo of Brisighella was Colonel, being the first to give so disgraceful an Example to the others; and the same vile Cowardice and Panic ran through the rest of the Army, there being scarce any that offered to fight, or turn their Faces to the Enemy. Thus was the Valour of Alviano rendered useless at least by the Flight of his Soldiers, and he was forced to leave without fighting the Victory to his Enemies, who remained Masters of

A. D. 1513. the Artillery and all the Baggage. The Venetian Foot were dispersed into different Places; of the Men at Arms Part fled to the Mountains, and others saved themselves in Padoua and Trevigi, whither also fled for Refuge Alviano and Gritti. There were killed Francesco Calzone, Antonio Pio an old Officer, together with Costanzo his Son, Meleagro da Forli, and Luigi da Parma; but Paolo da Sant' Angelo, being almost spent, escaped, though covered with Wounds. The Prisoners were Gian Pagolo Baglione, Giulio Son of Gian Pagolo Manfrone, Malatesta da Sogliano, and many other Officers and Men of Note, but with worse Fortune the Proveditor Loredano, for a Quarrel arising between two Soldiers about their Property in him as a Prisoner, one of them barbarously cut his Throat. The Number of the Killed and Taken was in all about Four Hundred Men at Arms, and Four Thousand Foot; for many were stopped in their Flight by the Marsh; and the Loss sustained among the Fugitives was the greater because Teodoro da Trivulzi, having shut the Gates of Vicenza to prevent the Entrance of the Pursuers

Pursuers with the Croud of them that fled, <sup>A. D.</sup> admitted no Person; hence Multitudes <sup>1513.</sup> seeking a Passage were drowned in the neighbouring River, among whom were Ermes Bentivoglio, and Sacramoro Visconti. Such was the Overthrow which the Venetians received on the Seventh Day of October near to Vicenza, memorable for the Example it gave to Generals by which they are warned in Battles to put no Confidence in Italian Infantry, who are unexperienced in firm and close Engagements; and also for the remarkable Turn, as it were in an Instant, of Victory to that Party who had very small Hopes of their Safety; and this Defeat would have endangered Trevigi or Padoua, though into this latter City Bartolomeo d'Alviano, and into the other Andrea Gritti with the Remains of the Army had retired for Refuge, had not, besides the Strength of the Towns, the Time of the Year, which was near the rainy Season, been contrary, and the Generals incapable of disposing at Pleasure the Soldiers under Want of Pay to go upon new Enterprises. The Venetians, however, afflicted with so many Calamities,

A. D. and terrified by an Event so contrary to 1513. their Expectations, were not wanting to provide as well as they could for the Security of Padoua and Trevigi, to which, according to Custom in Times of extraordinary Danger, they sent a good Number of their noble Youth.

Treaty of Peace resumed. AFTER the Battle the Thoughts of the Warriors were diverted from Arms to a Treaty of Peace, which was negotiated at Rome, where was arrived the Bishop of Goritz, whose principal Commission was to pay Obedience to the Pope in the Name of the Emperor and of the Archduke. He was attended by Francesco Sforza Duke of Bari, who came to pay Obedience in the Name of Massimiliano Sforza his Brother. And tho' Goritz represented, as at other Times, the Person of the Emperor in Italy, yet laying aside his usual Ostentation he entered Rome in a modest Manner, and would make no Use on the Road of the Ensigns of the Cardinalship which were sent to him as far as Poggibonzi by the Pontiff.

AT the Arrival of the Cardinal of Go-ritz, a Compromise was made by him and the Venetian Ambassadors for referring all the Differences between the Emperor and the Republic to the Arbitration of the Pontiff. But this Compromise was more in Name and Show than in Effect and Substance; for neither of the Parties, on account of the Importance of the Cause, would acquiesce in the Arbitration of a Person suspected, unless he received a separate and private Promise from him not to bring in his Arbitration without his Consent*. The Compromise being made, the Pope by a Brief suspended Hostilities between the Parties, which, though it was joyfully received by all, was but ill observed by the Viceroy, who had done nothing since the Victory, but plunder and ravage the Country, and by sending Part of his Soldiers to the Polesine of Ro- vigo had done great Damage to those Parts, sometimes alledging in Excuse that they

* The Pope promised by a Writing under his own Hand to do nothing but what should please both Parties.
Mocenigo.

A. D. they were the Territory of Cæsar, sometimes saying that he expected Advice from Goritz. Nor had the Compromise a more happy Issue than it had in the Beginning or Progress, on account of the Difficulties which occurred in the Treaty; for Cæsar would consent to no Agreement without retaining Part of the Towns, and receiving a very large Sum of Money for the rest; and, on the contrary, the Venetians demanded all the Towns, and offered but a small Sum of Money. It was believed that the Catholic King, though he openly seemed to desire, as he had formerly done, this Agreement, had now secretly dissuaded it, and to render it the more difficult, as it was understood, had at the same Time put Brescia in the Hands of Cæsar, which Town the Viceroy, protesting that he retained it to render that Prince the more disposed to Peace, could never before be induced to deliver up to him. Of the Causes of Cæsar's Averseness to Peace there were various Conjectures: It was imagined that he had done such Injuries and Damages to the Venetians, that he could never expect for the future to live in sincere Friendship

Friendship with them, and therefore declined an Accommodation ; or for another Reason, which was because he knew that his Authority and Grandeur in Italy depended on his keeping in Heart that Army which, for Want of Money, he could not maintain without oppressing and taxing the People that were his Friends, and ravaging and plundering the Countries of his Enemies. A. D. 1513.

THE Affair of the Accommodation was therefore left imperfect by the Pontiff, and a few Days after the Germans, by Means of some Exiles, surpris'd Marano, a maritime Town of Friuli, and afterwards took Montefalcone ; and though the Venetians, being desirous to recover Marano, which is Sixty Miles from Venice, besieged it by Land and Sea, yet their Fortune proving alike in all Places, they were repulsed with Loss in both Attacks. Renzo da Ceri was the only Person at that Time who, to his high Commendation, supported in some Measure the Reputation of the Venetian Arms. For though in Crema, of which he was Governor, there was a Pestilence, Renzo da Ceri an active Officer.

Pestilence, and no small Scarcity of Provisions, and the Place, by the Distribution of the Spaniards and Milanese on account of the Season into Quarters through the circumjacent Towns, was in a manner besieged, that vigilant Officer surpris'd Calcinaja, a Town in the Bergamasco, and took Cesare Fieramosca with Forty Men at Arms and Two Hundred light Horse of the Regiment of Prospero Colonna. And a few Days after he entered Quinzano by Night, and took Prisoner the Lieutenant of the Count of Santa Severina with fifty Men at Arms; and in Trevi he took Ten Men at Arms more belonging to Prospero.

Attempt
of the
Adorni
miscarries

THE other Affairs of Italy at this Time proceeded in a peaceable Manner, except that the Adorni and Fieschi, with Three Thousand Men of the Country People, and perhaps with the secret Favour of the Duke of Milan, took Specie, and other Places in the Eastern Riviera, and afterwards approached the Walls of Genoa; but being baffled in their Attempt they marched off, almost like Men after a Defeat, with the Loss of Part of the Troops which which they had brought with them, and some Pieces of Artillery.

1513.

IN Tuscany also there appeared some Beginnings of new Disturbances ; for the Florentines began to molest the Lucchese, in Hopes that, for Fear of the Pope, they would redeem their Peace by the Restitution of Pietrasanta and Mutrone, alledging that it was not fit they should enjoy the Benefit of that Confederacy which they had violated by secretly lending Assistance to the Pisans. The Lucchese complaining to the Pope, and to the Catholic King who had taken them under his Protection, of those Grievances, and finding no Redress, were content at last, for avoiding greater Inconveniencies, to refer the Cause to the Arbitration of the Pontiff, who, being also authorised by the Florentines, gave Sentence that the Lucchese, who had before restored the Carfagnana to the Duke of Ferrara, should yield up the Towns aforesaid to the Florentines, and that there should be a perpetual Peace and Confederacy between them.

Differences between the Florentines and Lucchese compromised.

AT the End of this Year the Castles of Milan and Cremona, which had before, because they begun to want Provisions, capitulated to surrender if they were not relieved within a certain Time, were delivered into the Possession of the Duke of Milan. Nothing now remained to the King of France in Italy but the Lantern of Genoa, which the Genoese about the Close of the Year attempted to ruin and demolish by Mines. For this Purpose they approached the Wall by Means of a Kind of wooden Gallery thirty Braces long and twenty wide, capable of Three Hundred Men, and begirt all around with Woolpacks to resist the Strokes of the Artillery: A Work of singular Artifice and Invention, but, as it frequently happens with such Machines, found to be of no Service upon Tryal*.

* The Garrison perceiving the Approach of the Machine, by Means of a great Fire which they had kindled on the Rampart, played on her with their Cannon till she sunk, with the Destruction of all that were in it, except some few saved by swimming or in Boats sent out for that Purpose. Giovio.

THIS Year was also memorable T for very destructive Wars in the Ultramontane Countries, of which I shall give some Account, for the same Reasons, and with the same Brevity, as I related those of the preceding Year. The Origin of these Movements was the Resolution of the King of England to attack this Summer the Kingdom of France with a very powerful Force, both by Sea and Land. In order to facilitate the Success of this Enterprize, he had agreed with Cæ- sar to give him an Hundred and Twenty Thousand Ducats, to enable him to enter at the same Time Burgundy with Three Thousand Horse, and Eight Thousand Foot, Part Swiss Part Germans. He promised also a Sum of Money to the Swiss to engage them to act in Concert with Cæsar, who consented that they should keep Possession of Part of Burgundy as a Security A. D. till he had entirely satisfied them for their <sup>1513.</sup> Arrears. The King of England persuaded himself also that the Catholic King his Father-in-law, in Consequence of the Confederacy in which he was engaged with Cæsar and himself, to which he had always assured them of his constant Adherence, would at the same Time attack the Enemy from his own Borders. The News therefore of the Truce which that King had made with the King of France, though it did not cool the Ardor for the War, was received with so much Indignation, not only by the King, but by all the People of England, that, had not the royal Authority interposed, the Spanish Ambassador would have been torn in Pieces by the Populace. The Conveniency of the Dominions of the Archduke was a farther Encouragement to the War, not so much because that Prince did not prohibit his Subjects from lifting themselves in the Service of the Enemies of France, as because he promised to grant Leave for Provisions to be conveyed from his Territories to the English Army.

Measures taken by Lewis for his Defence.

AGAINST these mighty Preparations, and most threatening Dangers, the King of France did not omit to make all possible Provisions. By Sea he prepared a powerful Fleet to oppose that which was fitting out in England; and by Land he assembled an Army from all Parts, and was especially careful to list as many German Foot as he could procure. He had also before solicited the Swiss that, though they were not willing to assist him in his Wars in Italy, they would at least consent to grant him a Body of their Troops for the Defence of France. But the Cantons being wholly intent on establishing the Dutchy of Milan, answered that they would not comply with his Request, unless he returned to the Communion of the Church, evacuated the Castle of Milan (which was not yet surrendered) renounced his Pretensions to that State, and promised never more to molest Milan nor Genoa. To divert the King of England with a Jealousy of his own Security, the King had also invited into France the Duke of Suffolk as a Competitor to that Kingdom, which provoked the

the English King to cut off the Head of the Duke's Brother, who had been kept a Prisoner in England since the Time that Philip King of Castile, after his Voyage to Spain, had delivered him up to this King's Father. The King of France had also some Hopes of a Peace with the Catholic King, because Ferdinando, as soon as he had heard of the League made between him and the Venetians, apprehending that the Dutchy of Milan could not be defended, had sent one of his Secretaries to France with new Proposals. And it was believed that, when he considered that the Greatness of the Emperor and of the Archduke might occasion some Alteration in his Government of Castile, he could not be entirely pleased with humbling the Crown of France. Moreover, he excited James King of Scotland, his old Ally, to invade the Kingdom of England; and that Prince, who had much stronger Inducements from his own Interest, for the Depression of France would be dangerous to his Kingdom, was very ready to engage in the Quarrel, and demanded nothing of

A. D. the King but Fifty Thousand Livres to 1513. purchase Provisions and Ammunition.

LEWIS, however, had proceeded but slowly in making these Preparations, because he had diverted his Thoughts to the Enterprize against Milan, and was also retarded by his usual Negligence, and his vain Confidence in the Truce which he had made with the Catholic King. The King of England spent many Months in making Preparations, for his Subjects had enjoyed a long Peace, and the Methods of War being much altered, the Bows and other Arms that were in use in former Times were now become useless. The King was therefore under a Necessity of making vast Provision of Arms, Artillery and Ammunition, to take into Pay a good Body of German Foot, as experienced Soldiers, and to purchase great Numbers of Horses, because it was the antient Custom of the English to fight on Foot. For these Reasons the English Forces did not pass the Sea before the Month of July, after which they encamped several Days near Boulogne, and then went and laid Siege to Terrouane,

Terrouane, a Town situated on the Borders of Picardy, and inhabited by the People whom the Latins call Morini. Not long after the King passed the Sea in Person, and now had in his whole Army Five Thousand Fighting Horse, and above Forty Thousand Foot. This Multitude encamped together, and, after they had, according to the antient Custom of the English, surrounded their Quarters with Trenches, Carts and Ramparts of Wood, defended by Cannon planted all around, so that they seemed to be inclosed within a walled Town, they plied their Batteries against Terrouane in several Places, and worked on Mines; but their Valour not answering the Greatness of their Preparations, nor the Fame of their Fierceness, they did not venture to give the Assault. There were in the Town, which was well furnished with Artillery, Two Hundred and Fifty Lances and Two Thousand Foot; a small Garrison, but not without Hopes of a Reinforcement: For the King of France, who had been careful to assemble the Army, which was designed to consist of Twenty-five Hundred Lances,

A. D. Ten Thousand German Foot commanded Thousand Foot of the National Troops, was arrived at Amiens, that the Vicinity of his Forces might animate the Hopes and Resolution of the Besieged. The Garrison were under no Apprehensions but of the Want of Provisions, with which they had neglected to supply themselves, except it were with Bread, of which they had enough, and annoyed the Enemy both Night and Day with their Cannon, by which the King's great Chamberlain was killed, and Talbot, Captain of Calais, had a Leg shot off. The King of France was much concerned at the Danger of Terrouane, but because he had too late, and with a French Negligence, set about providing himself, and because of the Difficulty of procuring the German Infantry, he had not as yet assembled all his Troops.

 He was resolved, however, at all Events not to hazard a Battle, for if he should be defeated the whole Kingdom of France would be exposed to most manifest Danger, and therefore he trusted to the Winter, which in those cold Countries was already ready on its Approach. But as soon as the Army was assembled, he continued himself at Amiens, but ordered the Troops to march to Aire, in the Neighbourhood of Terrouane, under the Command of M. de Longueville, otherwise entitled Marquis of Rotelin, a Prince of the royal Blood, and Captain of the King's Lifeguard, and of M. de la Palisse, with a Charge to avoid all Occasions of coming to an Engagement, and employ themselves in furnishing with Necessaries for their Defence the Towns in that District, which had, thro' the same Negligence, been hitherto but ill provided, and to throw, if possible, some Succours of Men and Provisions into Terrouane; an Attempt difficult in itself, but become more difficult for Want of Agreement between the Generals, each of them, one on account of his Nobility, and the other on the Score of his long Experience in War, arrogating to himself the chief Management of Affairs. The Garrison, however, of Terrouane demanding a Reinforcement of Men, Fifteen Hundred Lances approached the Place at a Side most remote from the English Quarters, and

*A. The French Generals encouraged by the Success of this Attempt approached another Day with a great Quantity of Provisions, in order to introduce them by the same Way. But the English had thrown up a new Fortification on that Side, and presenting themselves prevented their advancing forwards, and on the other hand sent out their Cavalry and Fifteen Thousand German Foot to cut off their Retreat. The French returning without Suspicion, and for Convenience veniency mounted on little Horses, as soon A. D. as they were attacked immediately betook <sup>1513.</sup>

Rotelin, Generals Bayard and Faiette, with many other Persons of Note; Palisse was also taken, but had the good Fortune to make his Escape. It was believed that if the English had known how to follow their Victory, they would that Day have opened themselves a Way to become Masters of the Kingdom of France. For a great Body of Germans, that had followed the Men at Arms, had rested behind; and if they had been defeated the French Army would have received so great a Loss that, as we are assured, the King on the first Advices imagining that the Germans also had been routed, looked upon his Affairs as in a desperate State, and miserably lamenting and bemoaning himself thought of nothing but flying into Bretany. But the English, as soon as they had put to Flight the French Cavalry, intent on the Acquisition of Terrouane, conducted the Prisoners

 ing of Relief, and the Germans that were Terrouane in Garrison not willing to suffer without taken. Hope the utmost Scarcity of Provisions, capitulated, and agreed to march out of the Place, if it was not relieved in two Days, the Soldiers to pass unmolested, and to keep their Horses; and it is not doubted that their bravely sustaining a Siege Fifty Days was of signal Service to the King of France. A few Days before Maximilian arrived in Person in the English Army, and refreshed his Memory with the Sight of those Places where, though now unlike himself, he had, when yet a Youth, with so much Glory defeated the Army of Lewis XI. King of France*; while he stayed he was complimented with the Title of Commander in chief†.

* When the French and Germans contended about the Bounds of their Dominions Maximilian, when very young, in the Plains of Cbingatta (near Terrouane) routed Philip Des Cordes, a very experienced General of Lewis XI. at the Head of Thirty Thousand French. Giovio.

† English Historians say that he did Henry VIII. the Honour to list under him, wore the English red Cross, and received a Salary of an Hundred Crowns a Day.

BUT the King of France was not only A. D. molested on that Side of his Dominions <sup>1513.</sup> by the English, but distressed in a more dangerous Manner in a different Quarter by the Swiss. The Populace of that Nation being ardently desirous that the King should give up the Right which he pretended to the Dutchy of Milan, and burning with inexpressible Hatred against him because he shewed no Compliance, had set on Fire the Houses of many private Citizens of Lucern, whom they had suspected of immoderately favouring the French Interest, and continuing their Proceedings against those who laboured under the like Suspicion, had constrained all the principal of them to deliver up their Pensions upon Oath for the Service of the Community. After this, taking up Arms by public Decree, they entered Burgundy in a tumultuous Manner, to the Number of Twenty Thousand Foot, being supplied with Artillery and a Thousand Horse by Cæsar, who had promised them and the King of England to go with them in Person, but out of his usual Inconstancy, or from some Jealousy which he had conceived ceived of them, now refused it. They continued their March till they came before Dijon, the Capital of Burgundy, to which they laid Siege. In the City was a Garrison of a Thousand Lances and Six Thousand Foot commanded by Tremouille. The Bulk of the Soldiers and Subalterns among the Swiss, being apprehensive of the Treachery of their Generals, who had already begun to treat with the French, planted the Artillery, and began to batter the Town*. Tremouille being under no small Apprehensions that he should not be able to defend the Place, had Recourse to the last Remedy, and suddenly came to an Agreement without waiting for a Commission from the King. The Articles were in Substance, that the King should be bound to renounce his Right to the Dutchy of Milan, and to pay the Swiss, at certain Times, Six Hundred Thousand Ducats; for the Performance of which Conditions he was to deliver into their Hands four honourable honourable Persons of high Rank and A. D. Quality as Hostages. The Swiss were <sup>1513.</sup> obliged to nothing but to return Home to their own Habitations, so that they were not bound to live in Friendship with the King of France for the future, but might even return whenever they pleased, and invade his Kingdom. The Swiss on receiving the Hostages immediately set out on their March homewards, excusing themselves for making an Agreement without the King of England, by alledging that they had not received the Money he had promised them at the Time when it was due.

THIS Agreement was thought to have saved the Kingdom of France; for if the Swiss had taken Dijon, they would have had it in their Power to march without Resistance to the Gates of Paris; and it was probable that the King of England would have passed the River Somme, and marched into Champagne, in order to join them: An Attempt, the Success of which could not be prevented by the French, who at that Time had no more than Six Thousand

A. D 1513 land German Foot, and the Duke of Guelderland not being yet arrived were under a Necessity of keeping themselves inclosed within their Towns. The King, however, took it very much to Heart, and was highly dissatisfied with Tremouille on account of the Quantity of Money he had engaged to pay, but much more because he had obliged him to recede from his Rights, as a Step very prejudicial in itself, and unworthy of the Grandeur and Glory of the Crown of France. Wherefore tho' the Danger would still be very great if the Swiss should be provoked to return and make a fresh Attack upon his Dominions, yet trusting to the near Approach of Winter, and being sensible that the Enemy could not get their Forces together again under a considerable Time, he resolved to run the utmost Hazard sooner than deprive himself of his Right to that Dutchy, of which he was excessively fond. He determined then not to ratify the Agreement, but began to propose new Conditions, to which the Swiss shewed themselves utterly averse, and threatened to cut off the Heads of the Hostages if the Ratification

TERROUANE being taken, and the Archduke pretending a Title to it by antient Right, and the King of England claiming it as his own by Conquest in lawful War, it was thought fit by Cæsar and the King to suppress the Seeds of Dissention by demolishing the Walls, though it had been forbidden them by the Articles of the Capitulation. Cæsar then immediately left the Army, making this Observation on <sup>Cæsar's</sup> the English, That, as far as he could perceive by Experience, they were rash, and <sup>Observa-</sup>tion on <sup>the</sup> English had but little Skill in War.

FROM Terrouane the King of England went and laid Siege to Tournay, a very <sup>Tournay</sup> strong and rich City, and most devoted <sup>befieged</sup> by antient Inclination to the Crown of <sup>and taken</sup> France, but surrounded by the Dominions of the Archduke, and therefore incapable of receiving Relief from the French while they were not Masters of the Field. This Step of the English was very acceptable to the King of France, who was afraid they would

A. D. would come and attack him in some more <sup>1513.</sup> important Parts of his Kingdom, which would have reduced him to great Straits.
For though he had by this time assembled a potent Army, in which, besides Five Hundred Lances in Garrison at St. Quintin, he had Two Thousand Lances, Eight Hundred Albanian light Horse, Ten Thousand German Foot, a Thousand Swiss, and Eight Thousand Foot of his own Kingdom, the English Army was much more powerful, and reported, from a daily Accession of new Troops, to amount to no less than Eighty Thousand Fighting Men.
The King therefore, who had no great Hopes of defending Boulogne and the rest of the Country beyond the Somme, to which he was apprehensive the English would turn their Arms, thought of nothing but how to defend Abbeville and Amiens and the other Towns on this Side the Somme, and to dispute the Passage of that River, and so to proceed temporising till the Setting in of the cold Season, or till the Diversion of the King of Scotland, from which he had great Expectations, produced some Effect, his Army in the mean time patrolling along the Somme to prevent the Passage of the A. D. Enemy. It was believed that this Reso-<sup>1513.</sup> lution of the English, which was certainly unworthy of military Men, and of so great an Army, was occasioned either by the Persuasions of Cæsar, who might hope that Tournay when taken would then or in Process of Time come under the Dominion of his Nephew, to whom he pretended it belonged; or by an Apprehension of wanting Provisions if they marched another Way, or that other Towns to which they might lay Siege would be relieved by the Enemy. The City of Tournay, being unprovided with foreign Troops, despairing of Relief, and battered on several Quarters, made but a short Defence, and surrendered on Condition of Safety to the Persons and all the Effects of the People within it, only paying, on the Account of redeeming themselves from Plunder, an Hundred Thousand Ducats.

FORTUNE did not shew herself more favourable to the French in other Parts; for the King of Scotland passing the River

A. D. Tweed, and coming to an Engagement

 King of defeated and slain. Scotland defeated and slain. which fell above Twelve Thousand Scots, together with the King himself, his natural Son, the Archbishop of St. Andrews, and many other Prelates and Nobles of that Kingdom. After these Conquests and Victories, the Season now drawing on towards the End of October, the English King, leaving a numerous Garrison in Tournay, and disbanding his German Horse and Foot, returned into England, having reaped no other Fruit from a War undertaken with such vast Preparations, and inestimable Charges, than the City of Tournay, for Terrouane being dismantled was left in the Power of the King of France. He was induced to pass the Sea because, it being impossible in those very cold Countries to continue the Operations of the War, it could be of no Service to tarry abroad at so vast an Expence; and besides he was thinking to take some Care about settling the Tuition of the new King of Scotland, a Child, and his Sister's Son; the the Duke of Albany, one of the Blood A. D. royal of the Scots, being already gone for <sup>1513.</sup> that Kingdom.

UPON Henry's Departure the King of France disbanded all his Army except the German Infantry, being delivered from <sup>King of</sup> the Fear of present Dangers, but not <sup>France</sup> from Apprehensions of the Return of <sup>under</sup> greater Difficulties with the succeeding <sup>Appre-</sup> Year; for the King of England when he <sup>hensions;</sup> left France had protested with many threatening Speeches that he would return the next Summer, and that he might not again be obliged to take the Field so late in the Year had already begun to make new Preparations. Lewis knew also that Cæsar was in the same Disposition to act against him, and he was afraid lest the Catholic King, who had recourse to various Sub-terfuges for excusing to his Adversaries the Truce he had made, that he might not wholly alienate them from him, should take up Arms in their Favour; and he had strong Reasons for his Apprehensions from an intercepted Letter, in which that King, writing to his Ambassador at Cæsar's P 2 Court,

A. D. Court, and discovering an Intention far 1513. different from his Words, in which he always pretended an ardent Desire to enter into a War with the Infidels, and to pass the Seas in Person for the Recovery of Jerusalem, proposed to act in Concert with Cæsar for procuring the Dutchy of Milan to be transferred to Ferdinando their common Grandson, and younger Brother to the Archduke; demonstrating to him that when this Design was effected the rest of Italy would be necessitated to receive Laws from them, and that it would be easy for Cæsar, especially when assisted by his Forces, to obtain, what since the Death of his Consort had always been his Wish, the Pontificate, which once accomplished he might transfer the Imperial Crown from himself to the Archduke; concluding that such grand Designs could not be brought to Perfection but by Time and Opportunities. The King of France was fully convinced that the Animosities of the Swiss, to whom he made very large Offers, were not in any Measure pacified; but rather exasperated by new Provocations, for the Hostages given them by Tremouille, being apprehensive apprehensive, from the King's Non-<sup>A. D.</sup>observance of the Articles, that they <sup>1513.</sup> should lose their Heads, had privately withdrawn themselves into Germany; whence the King had Reason to be afraid that either at present, or at least the next Year, taking Advantage of his other manifold Distresses, they would make a Descent either into Burgundy or Dauphiné.

THESE Difficulties were in some measure the Cause that induced the King to consent to an Agreement with the Pope in spiritual Matters, the principal of which was the total Extirpation of the Pisan Council. This Point, which had been under Debate several Months, was attended with many Difficulties, and particularly with respect to the Things done either by the Authority of that Council, or against the Authority of the Pope; the Approbation of which appeared utterly unworthy of the Apostolic See, and the Revocation of them, it was not doubted, would occasion very great Confusion. A Commission therefore was granted to three Cardinals to consider of Means for providing viding against this Disorder. Some Difficulties also arose because it did not appear convenient to grant the King Absolution unless he demanded it, and on the other hand the King refused his Consent to demand it, because he would avoid branding with Schism his own Person and the Crown of France. At last the King quite tired with these Vexations, and tormented by the Importunities of all the People of his Kingdom, who ardently desired to be restored to Communion with the Roman Church, and also greatly moved by the pressing Instances of the Queen, who had always shewn her Abhorrence of these Disputes, determined to comply with the Will of the Pope, and not without some Hope also that this Obstacle being removed, his Holiness, according to his Intention, which he had artfully intimated to him, would shew himself not averse to his Interest, tho' there was a new Occasion of Dispute added to those of long standing, for the Pope had by a Brief commanded the King of Scotland not to molest the King of England.

IN the Eighth Session therefore of the Lateran Council, which was held in the latter End of the Year, the Agents of the King of France, in his Name, and producing his Commission, renounced the Pisan Conventicle, and adhered to the Lateran Council, and engaged that six Prelates of those who had been present at the Assembly at Pisa should come to Rome and perform the same Ceremony in the Name of the whole Gallican Church, and that some other Prelates should take a Journey thither in order to debate on the Pragmaticque, with an Intention to refer themselves on that Head to the Declaration of the Council, of whom in that same Session they obtained plenary Absolution of all Offences committed against the Roman Church: And these were the Transactions in Italy, France, and England during the Course of the Year 1513.

IN the Beginning of the Year 1514 1514. died Anne Queen of France, a most ex-Queen of cellent and thoroughly Catholic Princess, France having scarce tasted the Joys of the Union <sup>dies.</sup>

A. D. which she so fervently desired with the 1514. Church, and extremely lamented by the whole Kingdom, and by her own People of Bretany.

THE Kingdom of France being reduced to the Obedience of the Church, to the utter Extinction of the Name and Authority of the Pisan Council, some of those Potentates, who had entertained a Jealousy of the Greatness of the King of France, now began to look about them, and to fear that the Power of that Monarch would be too much depressed. These Apprehensions created Uneasiness in particular to the Pope, who, tho' he still desired that the King should not recover the Dutchy of Milan, yet doubted that Lewis, under a Terror of so many Dangers, and the melancholy Remembrance of the Events of the past Year, would, in conformity to the constant Sollicitations of the Catholic King, which were not displeasing to Cæsar, precipitate himself into a Convention with that Prince, in which, by a Contract of Marriage between his Daughter and one of the Grandsons of those those those Monarchs, Cæsar would grant her <sup>A. D.</sup> in Dowry the Dutchy of Milan. He <sup>1514.</sup> therefore took upon him to persuade the Swiss not to suffer their Hatred of the King of France to transport them so far as to throw him under a Necessity of taking a Resolution no less prejudicial to themselves than to him, as they knew also the evil Disposition of Cæsar and the Catholic King towards them, from desiring an Agreement, the Consequences of which, if they should get into their Possession the State of Milan, would prove no less dangerous to their own Liberty and Authority than to the Liberties of the Church and of all Italy. He advised them to persist in their Resolution that the King of France, should not regain the Dutchy of Milan, but at the same time to take care that, as it often happens in human Actions, they did not, in order to avoid one Extreme, run into another no less pernicious and dangerous, and by too great a Sollicitude to secure that State from returning under the King of France, be the Occasion of its falling into the Hands of others, with greater Hazard and Detriment to the Public,

Pope's Advice to
the Swiss.

A. D. Public, in proportion as it would be less 1514. easy to find Means for resisting their Power than it had been to check the growing Greatness of that King. The Republic of the Swiss, he said, had obtained all over the World the highest Reputation in the Arts of War by wonderful Exploits and most glorious Victories ; it was now their Duty to render themselves no less illustrious by the Arts of Peace, in foreseeing future Dangers from the present Juncture, and providing Remedies by Prudence and Counsel, and not suffering the Affairs of the Public to run backward to so great a Length as to prove irretrievable but by Fierceness and Dint of Arms.
 For in War it has been found by Experience in all Times that human Valour is often oppressed by the predominant Power of Fortune. It was more advisable therefore to moderate in some measure the Agreement of Dijon, especially since the King offers larger Subsidies, and promises to make a three Years Truce with the State of Milan, provided he is not constrained to make a Cession of his Right, which being a Point that has rather a specious Ap-

Appearance than any just Effect (for if <sup>A. D.</sup> an Opportunity should return for the King <sup>1514.</sup> to recover that Dutchy, his Cession would be no Hindrance to him but just as far as he pleased) it would be unreasonable for the Sake of such a Difficulty to set the Good of the Public at Stake.

ON the other Side his Holiness, by many Reasons, exhorted the King <sup>To the</sup> of <sup>King of</sup> France to make no Delay in ratifying the <sup>France.</sup> Treaty of Dijon, as a less Evil than to run the Risk of having so many Enemies next Summer within his Kingdom; admonishing him that it was the Duty of a wise Prince to embrace as good and beneficial the Choice of a lesser Evil in order to avoid a greater, and not, for the Sake of freeing himself from one Danger and one Disorder, to run headlong into another of greater Importance and more disgraceful. For what Honour could he get by giving up to his natural Enemies, who had pursued him with all the Arts of Treachery, the Dutchy of Milan with such manifest Marks of Cowardice? Or what Rest or Security could be expected from

A. D. from increasing, with so great a Diminution of his own Reputation, the Power of those who thought of nothing but annihilating the Kingdom of France? That he himself knew that no Promise, no Word of Honour, nor even Oath could secure him against their Devices, as he had learnt, to his infinite Damage, from past Experience. It lay hard upon him, he confessed, to yield up his Rights, but the Disgrace was the less, because a little Piece of Parchment did not make his Adversaries more potent, and this Promise having been made by his Ministers without his Consent, it could not be said that it had been his Resolution from the Beginning, but he would be the more excused in executing it, because he was in a manner necessitated by the Promise made in his Name, and by some Regard due to the Keeping of Faith. All the World knew, he said, from what imminent Danger this Agreement had at that Juncture delivered the Kingdom of France. He commended him for endeavouring by other Motives to induce the Swiss to comply with his Intentions, and wished that for the Security of his own Kingdom he A. D. would by all Means pursue an Agreement 1514. with them, for which End he would not fail, with all the Readiness imaginable, to use his good Offices for disposing the Swiss to conform themselves to his Majesty's Will; but if they continued obstinate, he exhorted him in a fatherly Manner to bend and submit to the Necessity of the Times, not only for all other Reasons, but also that he might not deprive him of an Excuse for separating himself from an Alliance with his Enemies.

THE King acknowledged the Justice of these Reasons, tho' he complained that the Pope had tacitly mixed Threats with Persuasions, and confessed that he was under a Necessity of coming to some Resolution that might lessen the Number of his Enemies. But he was fixed in his Determination to expose himself to all Dangers, rather than recede from his Rights to the Dutchy of Milan, in which he King of France
retains his Claim to
Dutchy of Milan.
 was encouraged by his Council and the whole Court, who, tho' they were extremely concerned that the King should make

A. D. make any more Wars in Italy, yet, out of 1514. Respect to the Dignity of the Crown of France, thought it far more intolerable that he should be forced to renounce his Claim in so ignominious a Manner.

THE same pertinacious Humour prevailed in the Diets of the Swiss; for tho' the King offered to pay them at present Four Hundred Thousand Ducats, and Eight Hundred Thousand more at different Times, and the Cardinal of Sion with many of the principal Persons, considering the imminent Danger if the King of France should unite with Cæsar and the Catholic King, were inclined to accept these Conditions, yet the Multitude, who were bitter Enemies to the Name of the French, and, grown proud with so many Victories, believed themselves able to defend the Milanesè against all other Princes in Combination, the Authority of Sion being also much diminished, and the other Chiefs suspected on account of the Pensions which they used to receive from the King of France, insisted, with the utmost Obstinacy, on the Ratification of the the Treaty of Dijon. They were even A. D. so far transported with Rashness that they <sup>1514.</sup> debated on making a new Invasion into Burgundy, but Sion and the other Chiefs opposed that Measure, not by open Authority, but by various Artifices and indirect Ways, referring a Resolution on that Head from Diet to Diet.

THE King of France therefore, neither attacked nor secure of being attacked by the Swiss, continued without Intermission the Treaty of Affinity with the Catholic King, in which the principal Difficulty was, as before, whether the young Princess should be under the Tuition of the Father or of the Father-in-law till she were of Age fit for Consummation of the Matrimony. For if she remained with the Father, Cæsar could not assure himself that the Marriage would take Effect; and the King, as long as he entertained any Hopes that the Report of this Affair, which he studiously divulged, might make any Impressions on the Minds of others, out of a Concern for their own Interests, which might turn to his Benefit, freely furnished Matter for the Disputes which arose on this Occasion. There came to his Court Quintana, Secretary to the Catholic King, who had been there the Year before on the same Account, and from hence with his Consent he passed forward to Caspar, and returned again to the King of France. At his Return, to give Time for the more convenient Removal of the Difficulties which obstructed a Peace, the King, and Quintana in the Name of his Catholic Majesty, prolonged the Truce that had been made the Year before for another Year on the same Conditions, to which was added very secretly that the King of France should not be at liberty to molest the Dutchy of Milan; but Asti and Genoa were not comprehended within this Article. This Condition the King of France kept secret, but the Catholic King caused it to be published and solemnly proclaimed throughout all Spain, leaving the Public at a Loss whether to believe the Denial of the one or the Affirmation of the other. In the same Convention the Space of three Months was reserved for the Accession of of Cæsar and the King of England, who, <sup>A. D.</sup> as Quintana affirmed, were both ready to <sup>1514.</sup> accede; as to the King of England he was mistaken, but the King of Aragon, who had resolved always to avoid a War on the Side of Spain, had persuaded Cæsar that there was no better Way to obtain the Marriage under Negotiation.

THIS Prolongation of the Truce increased the Pope's Suspicion that between these three Kings some Agreement had been concluded, or was on the Point of Conclusion, on Affairs of great Importance to the Prejudice of Italy. His Holiness however continuing firm in his first Resolutions, that it would be very pernicious to the common Liberty for the Dutchy of Milan to fall into the Hands of Cæsar and the Catholic King, and prejudicial also to have it recovered by the King of France, found it very difficult to proceed, and to ballance Affairs in such a Manner that the Means which promoted one of these Intentions might not prove destructive to the other, considering that one of the Dangers proceeded from the Depression

Pope embarrassed.

A. D. and Fears, and the other from the Great-1514. ness and Security of the King of France.

In order therefore to deliver that King from a Necessity of making an Agreement with the other Princes, he continued to exhort the Swiss, who were jealous of the Truce, to accommodate their Differences with him; and to render it difficult for him at all Events to pass into Italy, he took more Pains than ever to bring about an Agreement between Cæsar and the Venetian Senate. That prudent Body reflecting that a Truce would establish the Administration of Cæsar in the Towns that remained to him, resolved with a constant Mind either to make a Peace or to continue in Arms, without suffering themselves to be removed from so generous a Resolution by any Accident or Misfortune whatsoever. For besides their manifold Losses and unhappy Successes in the War, and their Despair of seeing a French Army in Italy this Year, they suffered also under the Wrath of Heaven, or the casual Events that depend on Fortune, a very terrible Fire happening the Beginning of this Year in Venice, which broke out by Night on commanded a Suspension of Arms on both Sides, which was but little observed by the Spaniards and Germans. For that Part of the Spaniards which had their Quarters in War in Friuli.

IN the mean time Frangipane committed great Ravages in Friuli, the Venetians not standing on their Guard, and the Germans, by means of a Conspiracy formed by some Exiles, made themselves Masters of Marano, a Town of Friuli near to Aquilia, and seated on the Sea. The Venetians, to recover the Place, ordered thither Baldassarre di Scipione with a Body of Troops, and Girolamo da Savorniano with a Multitude of Peasants by Land, who who having laid Siege to the Place, while a Squadron of Ships straitened it by Sea, the Germans to the Number of Five Hundred Horse, and Two Thousand Foot came to its Relief, and being joined by the Garrison sallied out upon the Venetians, and routed them with considerable Loss of Men and of all their Cannon, and with their Shipping took from them a Galley and many other Vessels; after which Victory they mastered Monfalcone by Storm. The Troops at Marano were a few Days after joined by Four Hundred Horse and Twelve Hundred German Foot from Vicenza, who in Conjunction with the other Horse Horſe newly arrived in Friuli ravaged all the Country. Wherefore Malateſta da Sogliano, Governor of that Province, with Six Hundred Horſe and Two Thouſand Foot, and Girolamo da Savorniano, with Two Thouſand Peaſants who were retired to Udine, finding themſelves too weak to reſiſt ſo great a Force, paſſed beyond the River Liquenza to give Aſſiſtance where they were able. But the Germans dividing themſelves one Part took Feltro and ſcoured all the circumjacent Country; and the Venetians, who had ſeized all the Paſſes, attacked a Part of that Body, conſiſting of Five Hundred Foot, at Baſſano, where they were unprovided, and overpowering them put them to Flight with the Loſs of Three Hundred killed on the Spot, and many Officers and Soldiers taken Priſoners. The other Part of the Germans were gone to lay Siege to Oſopo ſeated on the Top of a rugged Mountain, where, after they had battered the Caſtle, and ſtormed it ſeveral Times without Succeſs, they had no other Hopes of taking it but by keeping it blockaded, flattering themſelves that the Beſieged were in Want of Water.

A. D. But the Favour of Heaven supplying that {<sup>1514.</sup> Defect by frequent and plentiful Showers for some Days, they fell to storming the Place anew, but being repulsed, and despairing of reducing that Fortrefs by Blockade or Assault, they decamped and marched off.

THE Pope was very uneasy at these Proceedings, but much more concerned that he could find no Means for an Agreement satisfactory to both Parties. For as the frequent Changes in the Situation of Affairs, from the Progresses of the contending Powers, were constantly attended with a Change of Hopes and Expectations, it happened that when Cæsar had consented to give up Vicenza, retaining Verona, the Venetians refused a Peace unless Verona were also restored; and now when the Venetians, humbled by so many Blows, would have been contented with Vicenza alone, Cæsar, not satisfied with Verona, demanded also Vicenza. The Pontiff, quite out of Patience under these Difficulties, presumed that his Declaration would not be accepted: To convince the Public,

Public, however, that the Fault lay not in <sup>A. D.</sup> himself that an Accommodation could not <sup>1514</sup> be procured, he pronounced a Peace between the Parties with this Injunction; that there should be an immediate Cessation of Hostilities in all Parts, reserving to himself the Liberty to declare within a Year the Conditions of this Peace, in which, as well as in the Suspension of Arms, the Catholic King should be comprehended: That Cæsar should deposit Vicenza in his Hands, and all that he and the Spaniards possessed in the Padouan and Trevigian; the Venetians should in like manner deposit Crema, and as to all other Things each Party should keep Possession of what he now possessed till the Declaration: That this Sentence should be ratified by all the Parties within a Month, and at the Ratification the Venetians should pay unto Cæsar Twenty-five Thousand Ducats, and Twenty-five Thousand more within three Months next ensuing; but that this Sentence, if not ratified by all the Parties concerned, was intended to be void. The Pope chose this unusual Method of Arbitration, that he might not displease either

A. D. Side; and because there was no Person present who had a Commission to ratify in the Name of his Catholic Majesty, though his Ambassador passed his Word for his Master's Consent, for this Reason he reserved so much Time for every one to ratify, that the King's full Powers might arrive in Season. But the Venetians having resolved not to give their Ratification, because the Pope at the same time had not pronounced the Conditions of Peace as they had desired, the Sentence took no Effect.

In the mean time the Affairs of the Venetians had a prosperous Course in the Defence of Crema, which was distressed within by a Pestilence and Want of Provisions, and without by a Blockade from the Enemy: For Prospero Colonna was come to Esenengo with Two Hundred Men at Arms, Two Hundred and Fifty light Horse, and Two Thousand Foot; and Silvio Savello, with his own Regiment of Horse and Two Thousand Foot, was arrived on the other Side at Umbriano; both Places distant Two Miles from Crema.
This

Brave Actions of
Ceri.

This occasioned frequent Sallies from the Garrison, and Skirmishes with the Enemies, who were surprised by Renzo da Ceri with Part of the Garrison in their Quarters at Umbriano, and put to Flight with the Loss of many of their Foot; on which Occasion Prospero drew off his Troops, and quitted his Post. Renzo a few Days after, taking the Opportunity of the Lowness of the Waters, waded the Adda, and surprised fifty Men at Arms in their Quarters at Casiglione di Lodigiana. He acquired so much Reputation by these prosperous Actions, and his industrious Management, that he was universally accounted one of the best Officers in all Italy.

THE Venetians after this resolving to recover Friuli ordered Alviano to march thither with Two Hundred Men at Arms, Four Hundred light Horse, and Seven Hundred Foot. The General being on his March towards Portonon, his light Horse, which advanced before the rest, met without the Town Rizzano a German Officer with Two Hundred Men at Arms tonon, which they ſoon abandoned as deand the Town was plundered, and many of the Inhabitants were put to the Sword.

Alviano afterwards marched towards Oſopo, which was beſieged anew by Frangipane with another Part of the Germans, who on Notice of the Approach of the Venetians decamped, but having their Rear much preſſed by the Enemy's light Horſe were obliged to leave their Cannon and Baggage. By theſe Succeſſes the Venetians recovered almoſt the whole Country, and Alviano, after a fruitleſs Attempt on Go- ritz, returned with his Troops to Padoua, having in this Expedition, as he wrote to Rome, killed or taken Two Hundred Men at Arms, Two Hundred light Horſe, and Two Thouſand Foot. But the Germans after after his Departure drew together again, A. D. retook Cremonio and Monfalcone, and <sup>1514.</sup> obliged the Venetians to raise the Siege of Marano, where a few Days before Fran- gipane was taken in an Ambush, and carried to Venice. For the Besiegers perceiving the Approach of the Succours, decamped almost in as much Confusion as if they had been routed, and soon after their Stradiotti were put to Flight, and Giovanni Vettorio their Proveditor with One Hundred Horse taken Prisoners.

 These Changes and Vicissitudes of Fortune frequently happened in Friuli by the Vicinity of the Germans, who in their Wars in this Country employed none but Militia.
 These Troops, after scowering and plundering whatever came in their Way, whenever they perceived the Coming of the Venetian Troops accompanied by a Multitude of Peasants, immediately retired to their own Habitations, and returned again to the Field as Occasion served. The Venetians had ordered some Reinforcements for Friuli, on which the Viceroy appointed Alarcone, one of the Officers of those Spaniards who had their Quarters

A. D. 1514 } Quarters between Esli, Montagnana and Cologna, to march for that Country with Two Hundred Men at Arms, One Hundred light Horse, and Five Hundred Foot; but that Commander receiving Information on the Road that a Truce had been made for those Territories, to give Liberty for gathering in the Vintage, marched back to his Quarters.

THE Wars in Italy proceeding thus but slowly, the Negotiations of Peace and Concord were not intermitted; for the King of France still retaining some Hopes that the Swiss would accept of a Sum of Money in Recompense for the Renunciation of his Rights, solicited them for that Purpose with great Earnestness. But the Commonalty were so averse from granting his Request, that having, when the Hostages fled, constrained by Menaces the Governor of Geneva to deliver into their Hands as Prisoner the President of Grenoble, whom the King had sent to that City to treat with them, they examined him severely on the Rack to learn whether any Person of their Nation

tion were still French Pensioners, or held A. D. secret Correspondence with the King of France, neither Humanity nor any Justification being sufficient to restrain their barbarous Cruelty. <sup>1514.</sup>

LEWIS was not without Suspicion also that the Pontiff, who on account of his different Views was obliged to steer with very great Circumspection between so many Rocks, had secretly procured that the Swiss should not agree with him without his Intervention; not to incite them to make War upon him, from which he was continually persuading them, but either that they might remain firm to the Treaty of Dijon, or out of an Apprehension that their Agreement with the King would be followed by their Separation from himself. The King therefore threatened to precipitate himself into a Convention with the other Potentates, that he might not stand alone to be insulted by all the World. Besides, he was quite weary of the excessive Charges and of the Insolence of the Soldiery. For he had brought into France Twenty Thousand German Foot,

A. D. Foot, a Number which he had not been 1514. able to compleat but when the King of England lay before Tournay; and that he might have their Assistance in Season, if any new Occasion should arise, had retained them in his Kingdom, where they did infinite Damages to the Country. The King in this Exigence complained that the Pope intended to shut him out of Italy, and the other Princes wanted to expel him out of France.

IN so difficult and perplexed a State of Affairs the King of France had a Way opened for his Security, with Hopes of recovering his former Power and Reputation, by the inexpressible Indignation which the King of England had conceived against his Father-in-law for renewing the Truce, contrary to his often repeated Promise that he would never more enter into any Convention with the King of France without his Consent.
Henry complained in public of this injurious Treatment, and, declaring that this was the third Time he had been deceived by his Father-in-law, began to cool cool more and more in his Inclinations A. D. 1514. to prosecute the War against France. This Disposition of the King of England coming to the Knowledge of the Pontiff, his Holiness, induced either by a Jealousy Pope sollicits a Peace between France

 and England.
 that the King of France, if the other continued to molest him, would make Peace, and contract Affinity, as he constantly threatened, with the other two Kings, or else because he imagined that a Peace would certainly succeed between them, and was therefore willing to curry Favour with the King of France, and by his Interposition make a Merit of what he could not prevent, began to exhort the Cardinal of York to persuade his King to be content with the Glory that he had acquired, and, keeping in Mind what Correspondence of Faith he had found in Cæsar, the Catholic King, and the Swiss, to desist from employing his Arms against the Kingdom of France. We are assured that when it was represented to the Pope that as soon as the King of France had secured himself from a War with England he would turn his Arms against the Dutchy of Milan, he answered that he was sensible

A. D. 1514. { ble of that Danger, but it was also his Duty to consider on the other Hand the Danger that might arise from the Disunion of those Kings; and that in so weighty a Matter it was too difficult to ballance Things so perfectly as to resolve on Measures that should be entirely free from these Dangers; but that at all Events the Dutchy of Milan would not be destitute of the Defence of the Swiss, and that it was necessary in such uncertain and difficult Resolutions to entrust some Part to the Disposal of Chance or Fortune.

A Treaty set on Foot. BUT whatever was the Cause, whether the Authority of the Pope, or the Inclination of the Parties themselves, a Treaty of Peace was soon set on Foot between the Kings of France and England, the Negotiation of which, begun by the Pope with York, was shortly after transferred to England, whither the King of France on the same Business dispatched the General of Normandy, but under a Colour of treating about the Release of the Marquis of Rothelin. At his Arrival was published a Suspension of Arms only by

Time that the General stay'd in the Island. <sup>1514.</sup>

The Inclination of the King of England to Peace was increased by new Affronts; for Cæsar, who had promised not to ratify the Truce made by the Catholic King without his Concurrence, sent to that King the Instrument of Ratification, who in a Letter to the King of France, ratified in Cæsar's Name*, keeping the Instrument as of Service to him in his Arts of Diffimulation.

As soon as the Treaty was begun between the two Kings, the Pontiff, desirous to ingratiate himself with both, sent Post to the King of France the Bishop of Tricarico to make an Offer of all his Labour and Authority, and that Prelate with the King's Consent passed into England for the same Purpose. At the Beginning of the Negotiation many Difficulties arose, for the King of England demanded Boulogne in Picardy with a great Sum of Money; but the Difference at last rested solely on the Affair of Tournay, for the King of England insisted on keeping it, and the French

A. D. made some Difficulty of complying with to the King of France the Bishop of Tricarico, who, without being informed in what particular Point the Difference consisted, had only a general Commission to exhort his most Christian Majesty in his Name, that, for the Sake of so great a Benefit as Peace, he would not insist so nicely on Difficulties that might be started. On this, the King not willing to incur the Reproaches of his People, because Tournay was a noble Town, and noted for its Fidelity to the Crown of France, proposed the Affair in Council, at which were present all the principal Men of the Court, who unanimously advised him to embrace Peace even on Condition of losing that City, tho' the Catholic King at this Juncture exerted his utmost Efforts to prevent it, proposing to the King of France many advantageous Conditions, and particularly to favour him in his Conquest of the State of Milan. As soon therefore as the Answer of the King was brought to England, which was in the Beginning of August, that he was satisfied satisfied as to the Affair of Tournay, a Peace A. D. was concluded between the two Kings for 1514. the Term of their Lives and one Year Peace afterwards, on Condition that Tournay concluded should remain to the King of England, to Condiwhom the King of France was to pay Six tions.

 Hundred Thousand Crowns in yearly Payments of an Hundred Thousand Livres : That for the Defence of their Dominions they should assist one another with Ten Thousand Foot in a Land War, but only with Six Thousand in a War by Sea : That the King of France should be obliged to furnish the King of England on every pressing Occasion with Twelve Hundred Lances, and this King to supply the other with Ten Thousand Foot, the Expences in this Case to be borne by the Party that had need of the Auxiliaries. Both the Kings nominated the King of Scotland, the Archduke, and the Empire, but neither Cæsar nor the Catholic King were nominated. The Swiss were nominated, but with a Restriction that whosoever defended the State of Milan, or the Cities of Genoa or Asti against the King of France should be excluded from the Nomination.

 THIS Peace, which was embraced with wonderful Readiness, was strengthen'd by a Contract of Affinity, for the King of England gave his Sister in Marriage to the King of France, on Condition that he should acknowledge that he had received with her in Dowry Four Hundred Thousand Crowns. The Nuptials were solemnized in England, at which the King, out of the Greatness of his Resentment against his Catholic Majesty, would not suffer his Ambassador to be present.

Austrian

THE Peace was hardly concluded when there arrived at the Court of France the Instrument of the Ratification made by Cæsar of the Truce, together with his Commission and that of the Catholic King for concluding of the Marriage treated of between Ferdinando of Austria, and the second Daughter of the King, yet but four Years of Age; but a Stop was put to all further Negotiation on this Head by the Conclusion of the Peace: And the King, the better to satisfy the King of England, ordered the Duke of Suffolk, who was

was Captain General of the German Foot A. D. in his Pay, to leave the Kingdom of <sup>1514.</sup> France; yet that Nobleman was dismissed by the King with such Careffes and Marks of Honour, that he departed well satisfied.

AT this Time the Pope also contracted new Alliances; for, as he was full of Ar-<sup>Treaties</sup> tifice and Diffimulation, he had a Mind on<sup>and Al-</sup> the one Hand that the King of France<sup>liances of</sup> should not recover the State of Milan, and<sup>the Pope.</sup> on the other to amuse him and the other Princes as much as he could by various and artful Ways. With this View, by the Mediation of Cardinal San Severino, who had the Management of the French Affairs in the Court of Rome, he had proposed to the King that, since the Times would not permit that there should be a greater or more open Alliance between them, they should at least make a Beginning, and lay a Foundation, on which they might hope to establish, at a more convenient Season, a very close Union and Correspondence, for which End he had sent him the Draught of a Convention.
 But the King, though he seemed to be

A. D. 1514. pleased with the Project, yet, either taken up with other Business, or expecting Answers from another Place, by which he might take his Measures according to the Progress of Affairs, did not answer so speedily as was hoped, and spending fifteen Days in coming to a Resolution, the Pope made a new Convention with Cæsar and the Catholic King, for one Year, containing, however, nothing more than the Defence of their respective States. The Catholic King had before suspected, and not without Reason, that the Pontiff aimed at the Kingdom of Naples for his Brother Giuliano; on which Design he had lately been consulting with the Venetians. Scarce was the Agreement concluded when arrived the Answer of the King of France, in which he approved of all that the Pope had proposed, only adding, that since he was bound to the Protection of the Florentines, of Giuliano his Brother, and Lorenzo de' Medici his Nephew, who was placed by the Pontiff at the Head of the Administration in Florence, he desired that they also should reciprocally oblige themselves to his Defence. On Receipt of this Answer

Answer the Pope excused his entering into Engagements with Cæſar and the Catholic King, by alledging that his Maſteſty had been ſo long in anſwering his reaſonable Demands, that he could not chuſe but entertain ſome Doubts of his Intention. However, he had made the Agreement but for a ſhort Time, and had entered into no Engagements prejudicial to his Maſteſty, or tending to obſtruct the Completion of the Negotiations begun between them. The King accepted of the Pope's Juſtification, and they united together in a Convention, though not by an Inſtrument for the greater Secrecy, but by a Schedule ſigned by both Parties.

THE Peace between the Kings of France and England was brought about with greater Facility and Speed than the Public expected, for none ever believed that ſo much Enmity could on a ſudden be converted into Kindneſs and Tyes of Marriage. The Pope perhaps was not pleaſed with this Peace, becauſe he, as well as others, believed that a Truce was to be expected ſooner than a Peace, or if a Peace

A. D. 1514. Peace that the same would be attended with harder Conditions to the King of France, or at least that he would be restrained for some time from attacking the State of Milan. But above all this Peace of the Two Kings was highly disagreeable to Cæsar, and also to the Catholic King, who yet, as there is no Evil in human Affairs that is not accompanied with some Good, declared that he received two Benefits from it much to his Satisfaction: One was, that the Archduke his Nephew being excluded from all Hopes of giving his Sister in Marriage to the King of France, and falling into Distrust with the King of England, would be obliged to proceed in all his Affairs under the Influence of his Counsel and Authority; the other was, that it being likely enough that the King of France would have Children, the Succession of Angoulesme was rendered doubtful, of which he had Reason to be glad, because that Nobleman was very desirous to restore the King of Navarre to his State, and was therefore the Object of his immortal Hatred and Jealousy. Only the Swiss, though they retained the same Hatred

 past, declared that they were heartily glad <sup>1514.</sup> of this Agreement, because that King finding himself at Liberty would, as it was supposed, turn his Arms against the Dutchy of Milan, which would give them a new Opportunity of displaying before all the World their Valour and their Faith.
 And it was not in the least doubted but that the King of France, being delivered in a manner from all Fears of Molestation beyond the Mountains, would return to his accustomed Desire of recovering the Milanese; but it was uncertain whether he intended to take the Field without Delay, or defer the Expedition to the next Year; for though the Facility of the Undertaking appeared manifest, yet there were no Signs of Preparations for it.

IN this Uncertainty the Pontiff, though <sup>Policy of</sup> it would grieve him very much if the <sup>the Pope.</sup> King should recover that State, solicited him with great Earnestness not to lose the present Opportunity by Delay, representing to him that the Country was in a bad State of Defence, for the Spanish Army
 was

<sup>1514.</sup> ple of the State of Milan were impoverished, and reduced to utmost Despair, and that there was none there that could advance Money for putting the Swiss in Motion. These Persuasions were of the greater Authority, because not long before the Peace with England, the Pope expressing a Desire that the King should recover Genoa, had given him some Hopes of inducing Ottaviano Fregoso to come to an Agreement with him. It is not doubted but that the Pope played the Hypocrite in this Affair, for which his Motives, as it is supposed, were his Observation of the bad Provisions for the Defence of the State, and his Apprehensions that the King would undertake this Expedition even without his Solicitations, because he had his Men at Arms in Readiness, and a good Body of German Foot, for which Reasons he was willing to prepossess and secure himself of his Friendship in this artful Way; or else because, proceeding from a deeper Fetch of Policy, he knew that it was true, what the Emperor and Catholic King affirmed, and the King of France denied, that his Most

Most Christian Majesty was prohibited to attempt any thing against the Milaneſe during the Truce, and therefore perſuading himſelf that Lewis would reſuſe the Expedition, he thought fit to beget in him a good Opinion of his Diſpoſition, and at the ſame time provide himſelf with an Excuse if he ſhould ſollicit his Aſſiſtance on another Occaſion. The Deſign ſucceeded according to his Wiſh, for the King having reſolved, either for the Reaſon aboveſaid, the Want of Money, or the Nearneſs of Winter, not to enter upon Action till Spring, and ſeeming to be confident that the Pope would not be wanting to favour his Enterpriſe at that Seaſon, answered with alledging various Excuses for his Delay, but ſtill concealing, what perhaps was the principal, the Truce, which was not yet expired.

THE King, however, had an Inclination to make ſome Attempt upon Genoa, or at leaſt to ſuccour the Lantern, which had by his Orders the ſame Year received ſeveral moderate Supplies of Proviſions in ſmall Veſſels, which pretending to enter the

 from the good Intentions of the Pope, of which he affured him, and from the Difpofition that he had fhewn in the Negotiations of Peace with the King of England and the Swifs, and becaufe he had ftimulated him to the Undertaking, that he fhould find in him a faft Friend, fince he made him large Offers, and in particular promifed to affift him in the Conqueft of Naples, either for the Church or for his Brother Giuliano ; but from fome some new Events which happened he <sup>A. D.</sup> began to entertain some Distrust of him. <sup>1514.</sup>

THE Pontiff could never be brought to accommodate Matters with the Duke of Ferrara, tho' at the Beginning of his Promotion he had given him very great Hopes of it when he was at Rome, and had promised the Restitution of Reggio at the Return of the Cardinal his Brother from Hungary. But after the Arrival of that Prelate he went on delaying the Restitution by various Excuses, confirming however the same Promises, not only in Words but by a Brief, and consenting that he should receive the Revenues of Reggio, as of a State that was shortly to return under his Dominion. But his Intention was far different and inclined to seize on Ferrara, to which he was stimulated by Alberto Carpi, Ambassador of <sup>Pope de-</sup>
Cæsar, and a most bitter Enemy of the <sup>sirous of</sup> Ferrara. Duke, and by many others, who proposed to him the glorious Example of Julius, who had immortalized himself by his enlarging in so ample a Manner the Dominion of the Church, and represented

A. D. 1514. sented that now he had an Opportunity of bestowing an honourable State on his Brother Giuliano, who proposing to himself more immoderate Hopes, had freely consented that Lorenzo his Nephew should be invested with the Authority of the House of the Medici in Florence. The Pope then entering into these Measures easily obtained of the Emperor, who always wanted Money, the City of Modena in Pledge for Forty Thousand Ducats, according to an Agreement made with him a little before the Death of Julius, designing to erect that City, together with Reggio, Parma, and Piacenza, into a Vicariate, or perpetual Government, to be bestowed on Giuliano, with the Addition of Ferrara whenever he should find an Opportunity to make himself Master of it.

THIS Mortgage occasioned no small Suspicion in the King of France, who was jealous of the Pope. He look'd upon it as a Sign of a close Correspondence with Cæsar; and he was vexed that the Pontiff had given him Money, tho' Leo in Excuse alledged that Cæsar

Cæſar had granted him Modena as a Pledge for Security of Money he had before received. The King's Suspicion was increased becauſe the Sultan of the Turks having obtained a great Victory over the Sophi of Persia, the Pope regarding it as an Event dangerous to Chriſtendom had wrote a circular Letter to all the Chriſtian Princes, exhorting them to deſiſt from mutual Hoſtilities, and ſeriously to think of entering into a deſenſive or offenſive League againſt the Enemies of their common Faith. But the Pope in a manner fully diſcovered his Diſpoſition to the King by ſending, under the ſame Pretence, Pietro Bembo his Secretary, afterwards Cardinal, to Venice, to diſpoſe the Senate towards an Agreement with the Emperor, in which the former Difficulties recurring, they would not accept it, but notified to the King of France the Occaſion of the Ambaſſy. Hence the King, taking it very ill that, at a Time when the Operations of War were ſo near, he ſhould ſeek to deprive him of the Aſſiſtance of his Allies, renewed his former Negotiations with the Catholic King, with a Deſign to terrify

A. D. the Pope into his Measures, or, if no 1514. such Effect followed, to conclude an Agreement in earnest. So ardently did he desire to recover the Dutchy of Milan!

DURING these Transactions there were no other Movements in Italy, except against the Venetians, on whom Attempts were made in the most secret and treacherous Manner. For, if we may believe the Venetian Writers, some Spanish Foot Soldiers came into Padoua, pretending to be Deserters from the Enemy's Camp, and there lay in wait to assassinate Alviano by a Commission from their Commanders, who were in Hopes that by making a sudden Approach with the Army to the Town, while all Things were in Confusion by the Death of such a General, they might easily become Masters of it. So little Resemblance is there between the Methods of War in our Days and those of the virtuous Antients, who were so far from suborning Assassins, that on the first Notice of any such base and wicked Contrivance they discovered it to the Enemy, whom they trusted to overcome by Valour, and not by Treachery! But <sup>A. D.</sup> the Plot in Padoua coming to Light, the <sup>1514.</sup> Villains were seized by the Magistrates, and suffered the Punishment which they deserved.
 by

THE Spaniards, much diminished in Number, were encamped between Mon-<sup>Motions of the</sup> tagnana, Cologna, and Este; and the Vene-<sup>Spaniards.</sup> tians, in order to oblige them to return into the Kingdom of Naples, had fitted out a Navy, of which they had constituted Andrea Gritti Captain General, with a Design to make a Descent on Puglia; but he met with so many Difficulties, that the Fleet was at last ordered to be disarmed and laid up. After this the Spaniards, at the Sollicitations of the German Garrison of Verona, marched to the Tower near Vicenza, in order to join with the others, and lay waste the Corn-Fields of the Padouans. But after they had waited in that Post several Days in vain, the Germans being reduced to a very small Number, and in no Condition to make good the Promises by which they had invited them, they laid aside VOL. VI. S their

A. D. 1514. their Design against the Padouan, and having got from the Germans Fifteen Hundred Foot to join with their own Forces, which consisted of Seven Hundred Men at Arms, Seven Hundred light Horse, and Three Thousand Five Hundred Foot, they marched to besiege Cittadella, which had a Garrison of Three Hundred light Horse. The Spaniards marched all Night with great Expedition, and arrived before the Town two Hours after Sun-rise, and immediately planting a Battery took the Place the same Day by Storm at the second Assault, with all the Horse that was in it, after which they returned to their former Quarters about Three Miles from Vicenza. Alviano made no Motion, having received Orders from the Senate not to fight, but lay with his Army consisting of Seven Hundred Men at Arms, One Thousand light Horse, and Seven Thousand Foot strongly encamped on the River Brenta, from whence he was continually harassing the Enemy with his light Horse, tho' afterwards, for the greater Security of the Army, he retired to Barciglione almost under the Gates of Padoua.

THE WARS IN ITALY. 275

Padoua. But the whole Country being <sup>A. D.</sup> exhausted by the Incurfions and Ravages <sup>1514.</sup> of both the Armies, the Spaniards in Want of Provisions retired to their first Quarters from whence they had fet out, abandoning the City of Vicenza and the Castle of Brendola feven Miles diftant from it, having no Pay or any other Means of Subfiftence but what they could raife by Contributions from Verona, Brefcia, Bergamo, and the circumjacent Territories.

AFTER the Retreat of the Spaniards <sup>Motions</sup> Alviano pofted himfelf with the Army in <sup>of Alvian.</sup> a very ftrong Camp between Battaglia <sup>no.</sup> and Padoua, where having Advice that Este had but a fmall and carelefs Garrifon, he fent thither by Night Four Hundred Horfe and One Thoufand Foot, who entering the Place before they were perceived, furprifed Eighty light Horfe of the Regiment of Corvera, that Commander faving himfelf in the Castle, and then returned to the Army. But Alviano having received fome Reinforcements prefented himfelf before Montagnana, and offered Battle to the Viceroy, who, becaufe he

A. D. 1514. was much inferior in Force, declined an Engagement, and retired into the Polesine of Rovigo; so that Alviano meeting with no more Opposition beyond the Adice scoured the Country every Day up to the very Gates of Verona, whence the Viceroy, apprehending that City to be in Danger, left Three Hundred Men at Arms and a Thousand Foot in the Polesine, and with the rest of the Army entered Verona.

Brave
Conduct of Renzo
da Ceri.

BUT much greater were the Distresses of Crema, which was in a manner besieged by the Troops of the Duke of Milan that were quartered in the adjacent Towns and Villages; for that Fortrefs laboured under a Scarcity of Provisions, and a raging Pestilence, and the Garrison had been several Months without Pay, and in Want of Ammunition and many other Necessaries, which had been often demanded; so that Renzo, doubting whether he could any longer support himself, had in a manner protested to the Venetians against their Negligence. But the same happy Success still attended him, for he had the good Fortune to attack Silvio Savello, who was at the Head

Head of Two Hundred Men at Arms, <sup>A. D.</sup> an Hundred light Horse, and Fifteen <sup>1513.</sup> Hundred Foot, and to come upon him so suddenly that he immediately broke his Troops, Silvio himself with fifty Men at Arms escaping by Flight to Lodi. After this Action the Venetians put into Crema a fresh Supply of Provisions, and Count Ni- colo Scotto reinforced the Garrison with Fifteen Hundred Foot. Renzo from these Supplies increased in Forces and Spirits in a few Days after entered the City of Bergamo, at the Invitation of the Inhabitants, the Spaniards flying into the Capella ; and at the same time Mercurio and Mal- testa Baglione took Three Hundred Horse quartered without the Walls. But a few Days after Nicolo Scotto marching with Five Hundred Italian Foot from Bergamo to Crema, was encountered by Two Hundred Swiss, routed, and taken Prisoner, and being conducted to the Duke of Milan was ordered to be beheaded. The Loss of Bergamo roused the Viceroy and Prospero Colonna, who with the Spanish and *Milanes*e Troops, to the Number of Five Thousand Foot, marched to besiege

He takes Bergamo.

A. D. 1514. it. They planted a Battery against the Gate of St. Catherine, which did great Execution, and Renzo, finding that the Place could not be defended, capitulated on Condition that he might march out with all his Soldiers and their Baggage, but without Sound of Trumpet, and his Colours lowered, leaving the Town to the Discretion of the Viceroy, who compounded with the Inhabitants for Eighty Thousand Ducats.

The City
retaken.

BUT during these Transactions at Crema and Bergamo, an Action that was highly celebrated, and required extraordinary Diligence and Speed, was performed by Alviano in the Town of Rovigo. In this Place were quartered above Two Hundred Spanish Men at Arms, who imagined themselves very secure because they had the River Adice between them and the Venetians. Alviano unexpectedly laying a Bridge at the Town of Anguillara, passed the River with incredible Speed at the Head of some active Troops, and arriving before the Town, where the Gate had already been seized by an Hundred of his Soldiers, Soldiers, whom he had sent before him A. D. dressed like Peasants, it being Market-day, <sup>1514.</sup> he entered the Place, and made the whole Garrison Prisoners. On this Misfortune the rest of the Spaniards who were quarter'd in the Polesine retired to Badia as the strongest Place in the Country, and afterwards wholly abandoning the Polesine and also Lignago, fled away towards Ferrara.

ROVIGO being taken, Alviano marched with the Army to Oppiano near Lignago, <sup>Motions</sup> whither he had also conducted by the <sup>of the</sup> River his Fleet of armed Barks, and from <sup>Armies.</sup> thence to Villa Cerea near to Verona, a Post from which, if he could not succeed in reducing that Town, which had a Garrison of Two Thousand Spanish and a Thousand German Foot, he designed to annoy and distress it during the Winter.
 But on Advice that Three Hundred Men at Arms, Five Hundred light Horse, and Six Thousand Foot of the Enemy were on their March towards Lignago, being apprehensive that they would intercept his Provisions, and force him to an Engagement,

A. D. 1514. ment, he decamped, and marched along observing them till they came to the Adice, which they passed at Albereto, in great Distress for Want of Provisions, which were intercepted by the light Horse and the armed Barks. Here the General, having Advice that the Spaniards had recovered Bergamo, and were returning towards Verona, resolved not to wait for them, but sent his Men at Arms by Land to Padoua, while he himself with the Foot, Baggage and Artillery, to avoid the Rains and the deep and miry Roads, embarked in the Night, and went down the Adice, not without Fear of being attacked by the Enemy, who were prevented by the too great Height of the Waters; but Alviano after landing his Troops conducted them with his usual Expedition in Safety to Padoua, where the Men at Arms were arrived two Days before. Some time after he distributed the Army into Quarters between Padoua and Trevigi, and the Viceroy and Prospero Colonna, after assigning the Troops their Posts in the Polesine of Rovigo, set out for Inspruck to assist at a Council

Council to be held by the Emperor on the present Occurrences.

1514.

THE Country of Friuli this Year enjoyed more Rest than usual through the Captivity of Frangipane, who was the principal Instrument in disturbing the Peace of that Province. The Venetians, therefore, knowing how much they were interested in keeping him a Prisoner, had refused to exchange him with Gian Pagolo Baglione. It had been treated before of exchanging this General for Bernardin Carvagiale, and Gian Pagolo had obtained Leave of the Spaniards to go to Rome upon his Parole of Honour to return if the Exchange did not take Effect. But while the Affair was in Agitation Carvagiale happened to die, and Pagolo, affirming that he was set at Liberty by this Event, refused to return under the Power of him who had taken him Prisoner. About the same time, which was towards the End of the Year, the Adorni and Fieschi, being secretly favoured, as it was thought, by the Duke of Milan, entered Genoa one Night by Means of a Plot, and advancing to the Square before the miscarries rest put his Enemies to Flight, receiving a flight Wound in the Hand, and took Sinibaldo dal Fiesco, Gieronimo Adorno, and Gian Camillo of Naples Prisoners.

AMONG the memorable Events of this Year may be reckoned the Spectacle of Elephants in Rome, an Animal, perhaps, never seen in Italy since the Triumphs and public Games of the Romans.
Leo X.
 presented with Elephants. For Emanuel King of Portugal, having deputed a very honourable Embassy to pay Obedience to the Pontiff, accompanied it with a Multitude of Presents, among which were two Elephants imported from India in his Ships; and the Entrance of these Creatures into Rome drew together a vast Concourse of People.

AT this Juncture the King of France, who had his Mind employed on other Objects than on Pomp and Shows, was ardently intent on making all manner of Preparations

Preparations for War; and, desirous to assure himself of the Inclinations of the Pontiff, though determined, howsoever he stood affected, to prosecute his intended Enterprize, he solicited him to declare in his Favour, renewing his former Offers, and declaring that, if he should be disappointed of his Alliance with him, he would accept the Conditions of the Emperor and the Catholic King which he had lately refused. He recommended to his Consideration the Power of his Kingdom, with the Confederacy and promised Assistance of the Venetians, the small Number of Forces of Cæsar and the King of Aragon at present in Italy, the extreme Want of Money of both these Kings, who were unable to pay their own Soldiers, and much less in a Condition to put the Swiss in Motion, who would not descend from their Mountains unless they were paid for it: That all the People of Milan, since they had so severely suffered under the Tyranny of other Lords, desired to return under the Dominion of the French: That the Pontiff had no Cause to provoke him to employ his victorious Arms against him as an Enemy,

A. D. 1514. Enemy, since the Greatness of the Kings of France in Italy, and his own in particular, had on all Occasions been of Service to the Apostolic See, for as they were always contented with the Possession of their lawful Rights, they never, as manifold Experience has demonstrated, attempted Encroachments upon the rest of Italy: But far different was the Intention of Cæsar and the Catholic King, whose constant Ambition was, either by Force of Arms, or by contracting Affinities, or by insidious Arts, to usurp the Empire of all Italy, and to bring under their Yoke the Apostolic See and the Roman Pontiffs themselves, as well as other Powers, which has ever been the ardent Desire of Cæsar, as all the World knows. He advised him therefore to provide at once for the Security of the Church, the common Liberty of Italy, and the Grandeur of his own Family the Medici, and to embrace the Opportunity, which would never offer at another Juncture, or with any other Alliance.

By Cæsar and the King of Aragon. NOR was the Pope less solicited by the pressing Invitations of Cæsar and the King of

of Aragon to join in Alliance with them A. D.

him that since their Conjunction had been powerful enough to drive the King of France out of the Dutchy of Milan, it was much more sufficient to defend that State against him. They put him in Mind of the Affront he had offered last Year to the King, by sending Money to the Swiss, when the royal Army passed into Italy; and desired him to consider that if the King obtained the Victory he would revenge himself for all past Offences, and take care to secure himself from future Dangers and Suspensions. But the Pope received deeper Impressions from the Authority and Offers of the Swiss, who persevering in their former Zeal offered, for Six Thousand Rhenish Florins per Month, to possess and defend the Passes Offers of
the Swiss;
of Monfanesè, Monginevra, and Finale with Six Thousand Men; and, for Forty Thousand Florins per Month, to attack the Dutchy of Burgundy with Twenty Thousand Men.

THE Pontiff, in this fluctuating State, irre-

A. D. irresolute in himself, spurred by his Inclinations, and bridled by his Fears, gave 1514. Answers to each Party in general Terms, and delayed as much as possible to declare his Mind. But the King of France insisting, almost to Importunity, on a Declaration, he finally answered that none better knew how much he was inclined to the King's Interest than his Majesty himself, since he could not but remember how warmly he had solicited him to pass into Italy at a Time he might have obtained the Victory without Danger or Bloodshed: That his Sollicitations, for Want of observing that Secresy which he had so often recommended, were come to the Knowledge of the others, to the Detriment of the King as well as of himself; for he had been in Danger of being molested by them, and the Obstructions to the King's Enterprize were increased, the Adversaries having re-established their Affairs in such a Manner that the Victory could not be obtained without very great Danger, and vast Effusion of Blood. Besides, the Power of the Turkish Sultan being lately augmented by such extraordinary nary Success, it was neither agreeable to A. D. his Nature, nor consistent with the Duty <sup>1514.</sup> of a Pontiff, to counsel or encourage the Christian Princes to go to War with one another : He could not therefore but advise his Majesty to desist from his Preparations in Hopes of a more favourable Opportunity, at which, whenever it should happen, he should find in him the same Disposition to promote his Glory and Greatness, which he might have discerned some Months ago. This Answer, tho' it did not so clearly express his Mind, would not only have deprived the King of all Hopes that the Pontiff would favour his Design, but, if it had come to his Knowledge, would in a manner have assured him that he would have opposed him both with his Counsels and Arms : These were the Transactions of the Year 1514.

His Character and Fortune. HE was a just Prince, and greatly beloved by his Subjects, but met with great Mutability of Fortune, for neither before he came to the Crown, nor during his Reign, was he attended with any constant and steady Course of Prosperity or Adversity; if we consider that from a petty Duke of Orleans he most happily succeeded to the Crown of France by the Death of Charles younger than himself and of his two Sons; that he acquired with the greatest Facility the Dutchy of Milan, and afterwards the Kingdom of Naples, by which he had for some Years together all Italy in a manner at his Devotion; that he recovered Genoa, which had rebelled, in the most prosperous Manner, and that he obtained a most glorious Victory

Victory over the Venetians, at which two <sup>A. D.</sup> last happy Events he was present in Per-<sup>1515.</sup> son. On the other Side, while yet a Youth, he was constrained by Lewis XI. to marry his barren and deformed Daughter, without procuring to himself by that Matrimony the Favour or Protection of his Father-in-law, after whose Decease he was excluded from the Regency during the Minority of the new King by the Authority and Grandeur of Madam de Bourbon, and was in a manner necessitated to take Refuge in Bretany, where he was afterwards taken in the Battle of St. Aubin, and confined two Years in a Prison. To these Misfortunes we may add the Siege and Famine that he endured in Novara, his many Defeats in the Kingdom of Naples, the Loss of the State of Milan, of Genoa, and of all the Towns that he had taken from the Venetians, and the War made upon him by most potent Enemies in the Kingdom of France, at which Time he saw his Dominions exposed to very great Dangers. He died however at a Time when his Affairs seemed to be taking a prosperous Course, since

A. D. he had defended his Kingdom, made 1515. Peace, contracted Affinity, and was in very close Union with the King of Eng- land, and in great Hopes of recovering the Dutchy of Milan.

Francis I. LEWIS XII. was succeeded by Mon-King of seigneur François d' Angoulesme, the next France. in Succession of the Males of the Blood Royal, and of the same Line of the Dukes of Orleans, being preferred before the Daughters of the deceased King by the Disposition of the Salic Law, of very antient Establishment in the Kingdom of France, by which, while there are any Males of the same Line, the Females are excluded from the royal Dignity. The Public had conceived so high an Opinion of the Valour, Magnanimity, natural Disposition, and generous Spirit of the new King, that it was universally acknowledged there had not for a very long Course of Years past a Prince of greater Expectations ascended the Throne; for he was mightily recommended to the public Favour by his personal Appearance, being old, and very handsome and well made, <sup>A. D.</sup> as well as by his extraordinary Liberality, <sup>1515.</sup> his extremely obliging Carriage towards every Body, and his perfect Knowledge in many Affairs of State; but above all he was the Favourite of the Nobility, on whom he conferred distinguishing Marks of his Favour. He assumed, together with the Title of King of France, that of Duke of Milan, as belonging to him not only by the antient Rights of the Dukes of Orleans, but also as comprehended in the Investiture made by the Emperor pursuant to the League of Cambray, having the same Inclination to recover it as was in his Predecessors. To this Undertaking he was stimulated, not only by his own Impulse, but also by all the young Noblemen of France, by the Glory of Gaston de Foix, and by the Memory of so many Victories obtained by the last Kings in Italy. That he might not however put others on their Guard in order to resist him before the Time, by Advice of his Counsel, he dissembled his Intentions, and in the mean time applied himself to negotiate, as is customary for new Monarchs,

A. D. <sup>1515.</sup> Treaties of Friendship with other Princes, many of whom soon sent Ambassadors to him. He received them all with a chearful Countenance, but above all the rest those of the King of England. That Prince, the Offence he had received from the Catholic King still remaining fresh upon his Memory, was desirous to perpetuate the Friendship begun by King Lewis. At the same Time arrived an Embassy from the Archduke, at the Head of which was M. de Nausau, with Marks of great Submission as to a Sovereign Lord, because his Master was in possession of the Earldom of Flanders, which acknowledged the Superiority of the Crown of France. Both these Embassies had a quick and easy Dispatch; for the Confederacy between the King of England and the late King was renewed on the same Conditions, and during their respective Lives, reserving the Space of three Years for the King of Scotland to accede to it. And many of those Difficulties which, it was imagined, would have obstructed an Agreement with the Archduke, were ceased. That Prince, who
was

A. D. 1515. tion was confirmed the Marriage, so often negotiated, between the Archduke and Renée Daughter of the late King Lewis, with a Dowry of Eight Hundred Thousand Crowns, and the Dutchy of Berry in Perpetuity to her and her Children. The Princess, being as yet of a very tender Age, was to have this Dowry assigned to her as soon as she came to be nine Years old, on condition that she should renounce all Rights of Inheritance either by the Father's or Mother's Side, and namely those which might belong to her on the Dutchies of Milan and Bretany; and the King was obliged to furnish the Archduke with Men and Ships for his Voyage to Spain after the Death of the Catholic King. At the King's Request the Duke of Guelderland was nominated, and some affirm that, besides the Premises, it was agreed that within three Months an Embassy should be sent to the King of Aragon, with a Commission from both Parties, to demand of him to cause the People to take an Oath to the Archduke as Prince of the Kingdom of Spain, which is the Title of the presumptive Successor,

to forbear defending the Dutchy of Milan. <sup>1515.</sup>

It is not to be doubted but that each of these two Princes had more Regard in this Confederacy to the Conveniencies it seemed to offer at present, than Intention to observe it for the Time to come. For what Dependence could be placed on the promised Nuptials, the Spouse being as yet under Four Years of Age? Or how could the King of France like to see the Archduke espouse Renée, who, by the Marriage of her elder Sister to the King, was invested with a Right to the Dutchy of Bretany? For the Bretons being desirous to have at one time or other a Duke of their own, when Anne their Dutcheſs contracted a second Marriage, covenanted that if her first-born Child came to the Crown of France, the Dutchy of Bretany should descend to the next born, and to the Descendants of that Birth.

THE King of France treated also with the Catholic King on prolonging the Truce made with his Predecessor, but with an Exception to the Condition of not molesting, during the Truce, the Dutchy of Milan. He was in Hopes that he should easily after this come to an Agreement with Cæsar, for which Purpose he kept the Ve- netians, who offered to renew the League made with the late King, in Suspense, chusing to be at Liberty to engage with Cæsar against them. But the Catholic King, though much influenced, as he was always, by his Desire to keep all Wars at a Distance from the Frontiers of Spain, yet considering that the Prolongation of the Truce would give great Umbrage to the Swiss, and that such a Step, by which his Words would be no longer credited, nor his Advice regarded, might induce the Pontiff, who had hitherto stood doubtful, to embrace the Friendship of the French, he at last refused to prolong the Truce but on the same Conditions on which the late King had renewed it.

FRANCIS therefore barred from all Hopes on that Quarter, and having less Reason to expect that Cæsar would enter into an Agreement with him contrary to the Will and Advice of the King of Aragon, had been made by his Predecessor. There Francis a Pass; and with the Pontiff, on whose Will the Florentines entirely depended, he proceeded no farther at present than to advise him to keep himself free from all Obligations of any Kind, that whenever he should be admonished by the Progress of Affairs to come to a Resolution it might be in his Power to chuse the better Part, assuring him at the same time that there was no Person upon Earth more devoted to him than himself, or from whom his Ho-linefs might expect a more sincere Affection, more of Honour and Integrity, or more advantageous Conditions for himself and his Family.

THE King having laid these Founda- Francis tions for his Proceedings, began with great prepares Application to provide himself with a good for War.
 Fund of Money, and to augment his Establishment

A. D. 1515. Establishment of Lances to Four Thousand, publishing abroad that he had no Intention to act offensively this Year, but only to put himself in a State of Defence against the Swiss, who threatened, if he did not fulfil the Convention made in the Name of the late King at Dijon, to make an Irruption into Burgundy or Dauphiné. This Dissimulation passed with many for real Truth, from the Example of the last Kings, who had always avoided involving themselves in new Wars in the first Year of their Reign ; but it made not the same Impression on the Minds of Cæsar and the King of Aragon, who were apprehensive of the King's Youth, and of the Facility with which he could, beyond what was usual with the other Kings, serve himself with the Forces of the whole Kingdom of France, in which he was vastly beloved and esteemed. Besides, it was known that King Lewis had left great Preparations, whence it appeared that, since there were no Apprehensions from England, the War was not the Consequence of a new Resolution taken by the King, but rather the Execution solved. 1515.

CÆSAR therefore and the Catholic King, that they might not be oppressed without Means for Defence, earnestly solicited an Alliance with the Pontiff and the Swiss. The Pontiff amused both Parties with fair Speeches, and endeavoured to feed them all with various Hopes, but declined as yet to make any positive Declaration. As for the Swiss, the Ardor of their first Resentment not only continued but still increased, the Causes of the public Indignation commenced from a Refusal to augment their Pensions, and from King Lewis's inviting German Foot to list themselves in his Service, with his uttering abusive and disdainful Speeches against their Nation, being aggravated by private Grievances, Uneasiness and Ambition, by the Jealousy which the Populace had conceived of many private Persons, who had received Presents and Pensions from the King of France, and because those who were most ardently zealous in opposing the Leaders of the Party that favoured the
French,

A. D. French, then commonly called GALLI-1515. CANS, having, on the Merit of their Services, with the Favour of the common People, ascended to Honour and Greatness, were apprehensive of a Diminution of their Authority if the Republic should again enter into Engagements with the Crown of France. Hence the public Councils and Debates not being managed with a Zeal for the common Good, but by Ambition and civil Dissension, the Interest of those who opposed the Gallicans Swiss re-jeet the Offers of the French
 prevailed, and it was resolved that the vast, or rather profuse, Offers of the French should be rejected.

Confederacy of Caesar, King of
Aragon,
 and the
Swiss.

IN this Disposition of Minds and Circumstances the Ambassadors of Caesar, the King of Aragon, and Duke of Milan assembled in Council with the Swiss, and contracted with them, in the Name of their Princes, a Confederacy for the Defence of Italy, reserving Time for the Pope to accede till the Sunday called Lætare in the next Lent. In this Treaty it was agreed that, in order to oblige the King of France to renounce his Pretensions to

the Dutchy of Milan, the Swiss, on the A. D.
 Monthly Payment of Thirty Thousand <sup>1515.</sup> Crowns by the other Confederates, should invade Burgundy or Dauphiné; and that the Catholic King should, with a potent Army, enter the Kingdom of France, either by the Way of Perpignan or of Fon- tarabia, that the French King being obliged to defend his own Dominions might not have it in his Power, though he were never so much inclined, to molest the Dutchy of Milan.

THE Resolution of the King was kept secret till June, but at last from the Greatness of his Preparations, and the Care and Diligence with which they were carried on, it was impossible to dissemble the Occasion of so considerable a Movement; for the King had provided himself with immense Sums of Money, enlisted great Numbers of German Foot, sent a large Train of Artillery towards Lions, and last of all dispatched into Guyenne Pietro Na- varra, with Orders to levy Ten Thousand Foot on the Frontiers of Navarre. The King had lately taken this Officer into his Service,

 Service, because the King of Aragon being incensed against him, as looking upon him to be in a great measure the Cause of the ill Success of the Battle of Ravenna, had never consented to pay his Ransom, which was rated at Twenty Thousand Ducats, and had been given by the late King to the Marquis of Rothelin, to indemnify him in Part for the Hundred Thousand Crowns which he had paid for his Ransom in England. But the new Monarch resolving to have the Benefit of his Service, had, when he came to the Crown, defrayed his Ransom himself, and afterwards taken him into his Pay, Pietro having previously, to clear his Honour, sent his Excuses to the King of Aragon for giving Way to Necessity when he found himself abandoned by him, surrendering at the same time into his Hands the Estate which the King had bestowed on him in the Kingdom of Naples.

THE Public then being convinced that the War was prepared against Milan, and that the King resolved to make the Expedition in Person, Francis began openly to to solicit the Pope to join with him, employing for that Purpose, besides a Multitude of Persuasions and other Instruments, the Mediation of Giuliano his Brother, who had lately married Philiberta, Sister of Charles Duke of Savoy, Aunt to the King by the Mother's Side, and had settled on her a Dowry of an Hundred Thousand Crowns of the Pope's Money. This Alliance put the King in Hopes that the Pope would incline to be his Friend, having contracted so near an Affinity with him, and the rather because having before treated with the Catholic King about matching Giuliano with a Kinswoman of his of the Family of Cardona, it appeared that more out of Respect to him than for any other Reason he had preferred this Match to the other. And the King did not doubt but Giuliano would heartily promote his Interest with the Pope, from an ambitious Desire of acquiring by his Means some State sufficient to support him in a Manner suitable to so grand a Marriage, and of more firmly establishing and rendering perpetual the Government of the Cities of Modena, Reggio, Parma and Piacenza, which

Brother;

A. D. 1515. which the Pope had lately given him, and in which he could hardly expect to maintain himself, without the Favour of mighty Princes, after the Death of his Brother.

BUT the Hopes of the King began soon to be blasted, for the Pope had granted to the King of Aragon the Croissades* of the Kingdom of Spain for two Years, by which, it was believed, he would raise above a Million of Ducats; and had besides given a very favourable Audience to Alberto da Carpi and Girolamo Vich, Ambassadors of Cæsar and the Catholic King, who were very assiduous in their Attendance on him, and were thought to communicate in all his Counsels. The Pope industriously kept the Public in this State of Ambiguity, giving fair Words, and shewing the best of Intentions to those who interceded for the King of France, without effectually coming to any Conclusion, but acting as one who

who desired above all things that the A. D.
 Dutchy of Milan should not fall into the <sup>1515.</sup> Hands of foreign Princes.

THE King therefore, willing to be satisfied of the Pope's Disposition, deputed to him new Ambassadors, among whom was Guillaume Budé of Paris, a Man of profound, and perhaps singular, Erudition in the Studies of Humanity, as well Greek as Latin, above all the Men of our Times.
 After these he sent Antonio Maria Pala- vicino, a Person acceptable to the Pontiff; but he might have spared all this Trouble, for Leo had, before his Arrival, very privately, as far back as July, entered into a Convention with the other Princes for the Defence of the State of Milan. But as he was willing that this Resolution should remain an absolute Secret till the Necessity of Affairs constrained him to declare himself, and was moreover desirous that his Declaration should be supported by some Excuse, he sometimes demanded the King's Consent that the Church should keep Possession of Parma and Piacenza, and sometimes made other Petitions, with an Intent

A. D. 1515. that from a Denial of one or other of his Demands it might appear that it was Necessity rather than Choice that induced him to join with the King's Enemies; yet doubting that the King would deny him nothing that he could with any manner of Decency propose, he continued to amuse him with various, ambiguous, and irresolute Answers.

BUT Leo was paid in his own Coin, and was treated by others in the same cunning and artful Manner; for Ottaviano Fregoso, Doge of Genoa, dreading the formidable Preparations of the King of France, and on the other Hand apprehensive of Danger from the Success of the Confederates, on account of the Inclination of the Duke of Milan and the Swiss to his Adversaries, had, by the Mediation of the Duke of Bourbon, very privately entered into an Agreement with the King of France, having, both while the Treaty was under Negotiation, and after it was concluded, with the greatest Constancy always assured the Pope of the contrary. And because Ottaviano had been

been an old and intimate Friend and Acquaintance of Leo and his Brother Giuliano, who had favoured him in his Attempt to make himself Doge, the Pontiff reposed so much Confidence in him, that when the Duke of Milan, suspecting his Design from general Report, was disposed to attack him with Four Thousand Swiss, who were already advanced to Novara, in conjunction with the Adorni and Fieschi, his Holiness interposed, and prevented their further Proceedings.

THE Articles on which Ottaviano capitulated were in Substance as follows: The Conditions.
 That the King should be restored to the Dominion of Genoa, together with the Castelletto: That Ottaviano should divest himself of the Title of Doge, and be constituted by the King perpetual Governor, with Power to dispose of the Offices of Genoa: That the King should give him the Command of One Hundred Lances, invest him with the Order of St. Michael, and settle on him an annual Provision during Life: That the King should not rebuild the Fortrefs of Codifa, U 2 which

A. D. 1515. which had been a great Eyesore to the Genoese, and should grant to the City of Genoa all those Covenants and Privileges which had been disannulled and burnt by King Lewis: And lastly, that he should assign a certain Portion of Ecclesiastic Revenues to Federigo Archbishop of Salerno, Ottaviano's Brother; and to Ottaviano himself, if he should ever happen to be driven out of Genoa, some Lordships in Provence.

Ottaviano
no justifies his Con- duct.

WHEN this Capitulation came to be made public it was no hard Matter for Ottaviano to justify his Resolution, because, as every one knew, he had just Reason to be afraid of the Duke of Milan and the Swiss. What only cast some Stain upon his Character was his frequently repeated Denial of the Truth to the Pope, from whom he had received so many Favours, and not keeping his Word with him, in which he had promised to make no Agreement without his Consent. However in a long Letter which he afterwards wrote to the Pope in his Justification, after he had accurately laid before him all the Reasons

Reasons that had induced him, with all A. D. the Excuses he could make in Defence <sup>1515.</sup> of his Honour, and of his Proceedings, in which he had by no means acted in Contempt of that Devotion which was due to him as Pontiff and his Benefactor, he concludes that his Justification would be more difficult if he were to write to private Persons, or to a Prince who measured the Affairs of State by private Considerations; but since he wrote to as wise a Prince as any in this Age, whose Wisdom enabled him to judge that it was impossible for him to secure his State by any other Method, it was superfluous to make Excuses to one who knew already, and perfectly understood what was lawful, or at least usual for Princes to do, not only when reduced to such a Necessity, but even for Improvement of their States, and putting them in a more flourishing Condition.

BUT by this Time the Face of Affairs was altered, and Words and Counsels were exchanged for Deeds and Execution; for the King of France was arrived at Lions,

 attended by all the Nobility of France with the Dukes of Lorraine and Guelderland, on his March towards the Mountains with a greater and more flourishing Army than had for a very long Time, passed out of France into Italy. The King was secure from being molested beyond the Mountains, for the King of Aragon, who had at first, from an Apprehension that these vast Preparations might be turned against himself, guarded his Frontiers, and that the People might with the more Alacrity fight in Defence of Navarre, united for ever that Kingdom to Castile, as soon as he was satisfied that the War manifestly directed its Course to Italy, disbanded all the Troops that he had assembled, and had no more Regard to the Promise which he had made that Year to the Confederates to make War in France, than he had to the Promises he had made them in the Year preceding.

AT the Fame of the March of the French Army, the Viceroy, who, after he had for many Months remained in a kind of

of Truce with the Venetians, was arrived <sup>A. D.</sup> in the Vicentine in order to approach the <sup>1515.</sup> Enemy, who were very strongly encamped in the Neighbourhood of Olmi near to Vicenza, returned with his Army to Verona, with a Design, as he reported, to march to the Defence of the Dutchy of Milan. The Pontiff also ordered his own Men at Arms and those of the Florentines to march for Lombardy under the Command of his Brother, who was elected General of the Church, in order to succour the said Dutchy, according to his Agreement made not many Days before with the other Confederates, tho', with his usual Diffimulation, he pretended that they were designed only for the Secu-<sup>Pope</sup> rity of Piacenza, Parma, and Reggio,<sup>dissembles</sup> and had gone such great Lengths with<sup>with the</sup> the French Ambassadors that the King, King of<sup>France.</sup> persuading himself that he might depend upon his Alliance, had dispatched Orders from Lions to his Ministers with full Powers for concluding an Agreement, consenting that the Church should keep Possession of Piacenza and Parma till she

A. D. received from him such a Recompence as 1515. the Pope himself should approve.

 descend into Italy.

BUT all these Remedies, for Reasons which will appear hereafter, were of no Service; it was decreed that the Dutchy of Milan should be saved or lost only with the Danger and by the Blood of the Swiss. That People, not retarded by any Neglect, or the small Supply of Money, descended with all Diligence into the Milaneſe, to the Number of more than Twenty Thousand Men, Ten Thousand of whom drew off towards the Mountains, with a Design to possess themselves of the narrow Passes of the Valleys which from the Foot of the Alps that divide Italy from France extend themselves into wide and open Plains, and so prevent the Progress of the French.

THIS Resolution of the Swiss greatly disturbed the King, who before had assured himself of Victory from the Multitude of his Forces: For his Army consisted of Two Thousand Five Hundred Lances, Twenty-two Thousand

of Guelderland, Ten Thousand Basques *, <sup>1515.</sup> (so were called the Infantry enlisted by Pietro Navarra) Eight Thousand French, and Three Thousand Pioneers, who received the same Pay as the other Foot. French The King, on consulting with his Officers, <sup>consult on</sup> agreed that, considering the Valour of <sup>passing the</sup> the Swiss, it would be impossible to force them from the strong and narrow Passes even with a much superior Number, which could be of no Service in such strait Places; that it would be difficult to perform any thing of Moment in a short Time, and more difficult to stay long in so barren a Country, with so great an Army, tho' vast Convoys of Provisions were continually on the Roads towards the Mountains. In these Perplexities some, who had more Hopes from making a Diversion than from a direct Attack, proposed detaching Eight Hundred Lances by the Way of Provence, and sending Pietro

* In the Original Guaschi, which the French properly enough translate Basques, which we chuse to keep, and is as much as to say Biscayners, for Navarra, as we read before, was ordered to levy Soldiers on the Frontiers of Navarre, which joins to Biscay.

A. D. <sup>1515.</sup> Pietro Navarra with his Ten Thousand Basques by Sea, who might join with the Lances at Savona. Others objected against this Scheme, that so great a Compass required too much Time, that the Forces would be weakened, and the Reputation of the Enemy too much increased by betraying a Want of Resolution to encounter with them. It was then resolved that, without turning much out of the Road they were in, they should attempt a Passage at some other Quarter, which either might not be observed, or at least not so well guarded by the Enemy; for which Purpose Emard de Prye should march with Four Hundred Lances and Five Hundred Foot by the Way of Genoa, not with Hopes of making a Diversion, but to infest Alessandria and the other Towns on this Side the Po.

Roads
over the Alps.

THERE are two Roads over the Alps which are usually taken by those who travel from Lions to Italy; one by Monfaneſe, a Mountain within the Dominion of the Duke of Savoy, which is the shortest, straightest, and generally the most frequented; ed; the other winds about from Lions to A. D.

Grenoble, and passes over the Mountain of Monginevra, within the Jurisdiction of Dauphiné; both the Roads meet at Susa, where the Plain begins to open, but that of Monginevra, though somewhat longer, yet being easier, and more convenient for conveying the Artillery, was always taken by the French Armies. The Swiss, intent on guarding these two Passes and some others that led to the neighbouring Places, had posted themselves at Susa, because the Passes lower down towards the Sea were so narrow and steep that it would be very difficult for the Cavalry of so great an Army, and seemed impossible for the Artillery to make its Way through them. On the other hand Trivulzio, whom the King had entrusted with this difficult Affair, attended by a vast Number of Pioneers, and having about him some skilful and industrious Persons, who were well ex-periened in the drawing of Artillery, whom he ordered to view the Places that had been proposed, employed himself in searching out the easiest Way of Passage that was not obstructed by the Swiss; the Army in
 the

A. D. 1515. the mean time, the greater Part of which was extended along the Road between Grenoble and Briançon, proceeded but slowly, in Expectation of what would be resolved, and also of receiving some necessary Supplies of Provision.

Henry excited against the King of France.

AT this Juncture the King, who had set out from Lions, was addressed by a Gentleman deputed from the King of England, who, in the Name of his Master, remonstrated, in very strong Terms, against his disturbing the Peace of Christendom by his Passage into Italy. The Cause of so great a Change was, that Henry being jealous of the Friendship contracted between the Archduke and the King of France, whose Affairs, he fancied, went on with too prosperous a Career, had begun to hearken to the Ambassadors of the Catholic King, who never ceased demonstrating how pernicious to him he would find at last the Greatness of the King of France, whom, on account of his natural Hatred, and because he had made his first Campaign against him, he could not but regard as his bitter Enemy. But he was more excited against him by Emulation, <sup>A. D.</sup> and Envy of his Glory, which he imagined <sup>1515.</sup> would increase beyond Measure if he should subdue the State of Milan. He considered with himself that when he came to the Crown, though he found his Kingdom at perfect Rest, and grown very rich by a long Peace, and himself in Possession of so great a Treasure accumulated by his Father, yet he had not, till after some Years, ventured to attack the King of France, and then at an Opportunity when he was alone, surrounded by so many Enemies, and worn out by so many Labours and Vexations. But the present King, somewhat younger than himself, when he came to the Crown, though he found his Kingdom wearied and exhausted by so many Wars, had yet ventured, in the first Months of his Reign, to undertake an Enterprize, in which he was sure to meet with Opposition from so many Princes. As for himself, he thought, with such great Preparations, and so many Opportunities, he had brought back to England no Gain nor Honour but the Conquest of Tournay, and that at an infinite
more

and

A. D. and intolerable Expence; whereas the 1515. King of France, if he obtained the Victory, as probably he would, by the Acquisition of so fine a Dutchy, would return into his Kingdom in full Triumph and Glory, having opened a Way also, and, perhaps before he left Italy, taken an Opportunity; for attacking the Kingdom of Naples.
 Stimulated by such Motives and Incentives his old Antipathy easily revived in his Breast, and as he could not for Want of Time give any Check to Francis with his Arms, and perhaps seeking also Occasion to furnish himself with more Pretences for justifying his Designs, he took care to send him this dehortatory Message.

BUT the King of France, not retarded in his Expedition by Henry's Remonstrances, proceeded from Lions to Dau- phine, where he reviewed the German Forces, arrived some time before under the Command of Robert de la Marche, and The Black
Band. called the Black Band. These Troops had been raised in Lower Germany, and were in high Estimation for their Valour, and constant Faithfulness in the French Service.

At this Time Gianjacopo da Trivulzi signified to the King that it was practicable <sup>A. D. 1515.</sup> to convey the Artillery over the Mountains <sup>New Passage over the Alps.</sup> between the maritime and Coctian Alps, and descend towards the Marquisate of Saluzzo, where, though the Difficulties were almost inconceivable, yet considering the vast Number of Pioneers well provided with all Manner of Tools, he could not fail at last to succeed: That since there was no Guard on that Side, neither on the Tops of the Hills nor at the Entrances into the Valleys, it was better to attempt surmounting the Ruggedness of the Mountains, and the Precipices of the Dales, which, though a Work of vast Labour, yet did not endanger the Lives of the Men, than to use Efforts for compelling the Swiss to abandon the Passes, and forcing Troops so much dreaded, and obstinately bent to conquer or die, especially considering that, if they met with Resistance, the Army could not continue there many Days, since no Strength nor Art could convey, over such rough and barren Places, Provisions enough to subsist so great a Multitude. This Counsel was embraced, and

A. D. and the Artillery, which had rested in a was immediately moved along that Road.

TRIVULZIO had given Notice that the Difficulty of conveying the Cannon would be very considerable, but it was found by Experience much greater than had been imagined, for it was necessary to ascend to the Tops of very high and rugged Mountains, which could not be mounted without vast Labour and Toil, because there were no Paths, and every now and then there wanted a sufficient Breadth for the Artillery, till it was widened Foot after Foot by the Pioneers, who still advanced before the rest, and were employed sometimes in enlarging the narrow Passes, sometimes in levelling the Hillocks that obstructed the Way. From the Tops of the Mountains they descended by very abrupt Precipices, most frightful even to behold, into the vastly deep Grounds near the Channel of the River Argentiera, in which Descent the Horses that drew the Artillery, though very numerous, together with the Shoulders of the Pioneers that that attended it, not being sufficient to <sup>A. D.</sup> guide and support it, they were often <sup>1515.</sup> obliged to dismount the heavy Pieces of Cannon, and to let them down, suspended by very thick Cables, by the Hands of the Soldiers, who in these difficult Circumstances were ready to undergo all manner of Fatigue. Nor was their Toil at an End after they had passed the first Mountains and Valleys, for they had others to pass with the same Difficulties. At last, after a continued Labour of five Days, the Artillery arrived in the Plains of the Marquisate of Saluzzo on this Side the Mountains, having met with such Obstructions and Difficulties, that it is most certain if there had been any Resistance, or if the Mountains, as the greater Part of them usually are, had been covered with Snow, all Labour would have been in vain; but they were secured from any Opposition, because the Swiss posted at Susa were intent on guarding the Places through which you must come after passing Monfaneſe, Mon-ginevra, or the neighbouring Mountains, and had imagined that it was impracticable to convey Artillery over such

A. D. rugged Eminences ; and the Season of the 1515. Year, it being about the Tenth of August, had removed the Impediment of the Snows, which were already melted.

THE Men at Arms and the Foot, not without many Difficulties, passed the Mountains at the same time, some by the same Road, others by the Pass they call the Dragoniera, and others again over the high Tops of the Mountains of the Rocca Perotta, and of Cuni, Passes lower down towards Provence. Monf. Palissè, after passing by this last Road, had an Opportunity of performing a memorable Action ; for departing from Singlare with four Squadrons of Horse, under the Conduct of the Peasants, after a very long March, he arrived at Villa Franca, a Town seven Miles from Saluzzo, and of more Note than it otherwise deserves, because near it rises the so much celebrated River Po. In this Place Prospero Colonna was quartered with his Company, without the least Suspicion of Danger, because of the great Distance of the Enemy, in whom he had no Apprehensions of that Quickness, which
 he

he himself, who was naturally very flow, <sup>A D.</sup> was never wont to use, and some say that <sup>1515.</sup> he intended that same Day to join the Swiss. But, however that be, it is certain that he was dining at his Table when the Troops of Palisse came upon him, unper-<sup>Prospero</sup>ceived by any before they were in the same <sup>Colonna</sup>House ; for the Inhabitants of the Town, <sup>taken Pri-</sup> with whom Palisse, intent on so great a Prey, had before held private Intelligence, had, with as little Noise as possible, seized the Centinels. Thus was Prospero Colonna, so famous a General, and of so great Importance in that War on account of his Credit and Authority in the Dutchy of Milan, taken Prisoner on the Fifteenth Day of August in a Manner not suitable to his former Glory. With Prospero was taken Pietro Margano, a Roman. and Part of his Company, the rest at the first Alarm dispersing themselves into various Parts made their Escape.

THE Passage of the French, and the Misfortune of Prospero Colonna caused an Alteration in the Counsels of every Party concerned, and changed the State of Af*fairs in general, creating new Dispositions* in the Minds of the Pope, the Viceroy, and the Swiss. For the Pope, who had firmly persuaded himself that the King would never be able to pass the Mountains against the Opposition of the Swiss, and had great Confidence in the Valour of Prospero Colonna, being now much sunk in Spirits, commanded his Nephew Lo- renzo, Captain General of the Florentines, to whom, because his Brother Giuliano lay ill of a lingering Fever at Florence, he had committed the Charge of conducting the Army into Lombardy, and who three Days after the Misfortune of Prospero was arrived at Modena, to proceed slowly.

Lorenzo, taking this Opportunity to recover the Castle of Rubiera, which had been seized by Guido Rangone, and for which he paid him at last, upon their Agreement, Two Thousand Ducats, wasted many Days in the Territories of Mo- dena and Reggio. Besides this, the Pontiff, having recourse to his usual Arts, dispatched away very privately Cintio his Confident to the King of France, to make his Excuses for all that had hitherto passed,

and to enter on a Treaty of Agreement <sup>A. D.</sup> by the Mediation of the Duke of Savoy, <sup>1515.</sup> with a View that from this Beginning he might the more easily proceed much further, if the Defence of the Dutchy of Milan succeeded unhappily.

BUT Cardinal Bibbiena and some <sup>Evil</sup> others, influenced more by private Passions <sup>Counsel-</sup> than by the Interest of their Prince, would <sup>lors about</sup> have hurried the Pontiff into more precipitate Measures; for they represented to him that it was to be feared the Fame of the prosperous Success of the French Army, and the Incitements and perhaps also the Assistance of the King would encourage the Duke of Ferrara to attempt the Recovery of Modena and Reggio, and the Bentivogli to return to Bologna: That in the Midst of so many other Troubles it was difficult to contend with so many Enemies, for which Reason as it was a better and doubtless a more prudent Measure to anticipate their Good-will by Kindness, and so win their Hearts as to make them, at all Events, his faithful Friends, they therefore persuaded him to

A. D. recall the Bentivogli to Bologna, and re-1515. store Modena and Reggio to the Duke of Ferrara.

Faithful Counsel of Cardinal Giu-lio.

THIS Counsel would certainly have been followed without Delay, if Giulio de' Medici, Cardinal, and Legate of Bologna, whom the Pope had sent thither to take upon him the Administration of Affairs in those Parts, in so critical a Time, and to be a Moderator and Counsellor to the unexperienced Youth of Lorenzo, had not been of a contrary Opinion. The Cardinal was deeply concerned at the Disgrace which the Pope would incur from so weak and pusillanimous a Step; a Disgrace certainly greater than the Glory that Julius had obtained by acquiring such considerable Dominions to the Church. He was moved also with Grief at the Infamy and Reproach that would be cast on the Memory of his Legateship, on which he had no sooner entered, it would be said, than he gave up Bologna, the principal City of the whole Ecclesiastic State into the Hands of its old Tyrants, sacrificing to their Revenge so great a Number

Number of the Nobility, who had openly declared against them in favour of the Apostolic See. Induced by these just Motives he sent some proper Persons to the Pontiff, and by Reasons and Intreaties prevailed on him to hearken to safer and more honourable Counsels.

GIULIO, tho' of illegitimate Birth, had been promoted by Leo to the Cardinalship in the first Months of his Pontificate, in which he followed the Example of Alexander VI. as to the Effect tho' not in the Manner. For Alexander, when he created his Son Cæsar Borgia a Cardinal, proved by Witnesses, who deposed, what was true, that his Mother at the Time of his Procreation had a Husband, inferring from hence that, according to the Presumption of the Laws, the Son ought to be esteemed the Offspring of the Husband rather than of the Adulterer. But in the Case of Giulio, the Witnesses, preferring the Favour of Men before the Truth, deposed that his Mother, who was a Virgin and not married when he was begotten, had obtained of his Father

Cardinal

A. D. Giuliano a Promise of Marriage before 1515. she admitted him to her Embraces.

THESE new Events produced also some Viceroy
 temporists Alteration in the Disposition of the Viceroy, who had not yet left Verona, on account of the Difficulty of taking the Field without Money, and because he expected a new Supply of Troops from Cæsar, who was arrived at Innsbruck, that he might leave, as Necessity required, sufficient Garrisons in Verona and Brescia.
 On these and other Pretences he began to excuse his Inactivity, and to temporise in Expectation of the Success of the Operations in the Dutchy of Milan.

THE Swiss also were put in a Commotion by this Turn of Affairs; for immediately after the Passage of the French they retired to Pinaruolo, tho' afterwards on Advice that the King had passed the Alps, and joined his Forces at Turin, they removed to Civas, which, because the Inhabitants refused to give them Provisions, they took by Force and plundered, and afterwards did the same at Vercelli, almost almost in the Eyes of the King, who A. D. was at Turin; but at last they assembled 1515. together at Novara, where those who were not so extremely averſe to the French Intereſt, taking Encouragement from the Swiſs at bad Situation of their Affairs, began to Novara. debate about coming to an Agreement with the King of France.

N o w the French Troops which came by the Way of Genoa, joining with Four Thouſand Foot, paid, at the Inſtances of Ottaviano Fregoſo, by the Genoeſe, took Pope de-Poſſeſſion firſt of the Town of Caſtellaccio, clares a-and afterwards of Aleſſandria and Tortona, gainſt the in which Cities there was not a Soldier, French. and made themſelves Maſters of all the Country on this Side the Po. The King advanced to Vercelli, where he received the firſt Information that the Pope had declared againſt him, the Duke of Savoy ſignifying it to him in his Name. Tho' the King was extremely concerned at this Declaration of the Pontiff, he did not however ſuffer his Judgment to give Way to his Indignation, but, that he might not exaſperate him, commanded by public Pro-

A. D. Proclamation, both in his Army and 1515. among the Troops that had taken Alessan- dria, that none should dare to molest or in any manner insult the Dominions of the Church.

Disorderly Behaviour of the Swiss. THE King after this rested several Days at Vercelli, waiting the Issue of some Affairs under Negotiation with the Swiss, who treating without Intermiſſion ſeemed on the other Hand full of Inconſtancy and Confuſion. In Novara, taking Occaſion to be tumultuous becauſe the Money which the King of Aragon was obliged to pay them was not yet arrived, they fell upon the Commiſſaries of the Pope, and took away by Violence the Money that he had ſent them, and in the ſame Rage broke up from Novara with an Intention to return to their own Country; which was what many of them deſired, who, having already been three Months in Italy, and loaded with Money and Plunder, were willing to carry home the Riches which they had gained in Safety to their own Houſes. But they had hardly left Novara when the King of Aragon's Money arrived,

rived, and tho' at first they were so rash <sup>A. D.</sup> as to seize it, yet reflecting on the Shame <sup>1515.</sup> and Reproach that must result from such precipitous Resolutions, they came in some Measure to themselves, restored both that and the other Money, and were contented to have it orderly distributed among them by the Commissaries. After this they removed to Galera in Expectation of Twenty Thousand more of their Countrymen, who were said to be on their March, and Three Thousand of them were arrived with the Cardinal of Sion, being designed to garrison the City of Pavia.

THE King therefore, whose Hopes of an Accommodation with the Swiss were much diminished by so many Variations in their Conduct, marched from Vercelli towards Milan, leaving at Vercelli, with the Duke of Savoy, the Bastard his Brother, Lautrech, and the General of Milan, to continue the Negotiations begun with the Swiss. He left also the Castle of Novara besieged, the City having opened its Gates to him at the Departure of the Swiss. The Castle, after a few Days Battery,

A. D. Battery, surrendered on Condition of 1515. Safety to the Lives and Effects of the Garrison. The King afterwards, having Pavia surrendered to him, passed the Tesino, and the same Day Gianjacopo da Trivulzi with Part of the Troops extended himself to San Cristofano near to Milan, and afterwards to the Suburb of the Gate of the Tesino, in Hopes that the City, which he knew to be very uneasy under the Rapines and Exactions of the Swiss and the Spaniards, and therefore desirous to return under the French Government, and to have at present no Garrison, would receive him within its Walls. But the Fear of the Swiss had a mighty Influence on the People of Milan, and they had still fresh in their Memories what they had suffered the last Year, when, on the Retreat of the Swiss to Novara, they made an Infurrection in favour of the King of France. They resolved therefore, tho' they wished the King Success, to wait the Issue of the Enterprize, and sent to Trivulzio to intreat him to advance no further. And the next Day they sent Ambassadors to the King, who was at Bu-

Bufaloro, humbly to beseech his Majesty A. D.
 to content himself with the Disposition of <sup>1515.</sup> the People of Milan, who were most devoted to his Crown, and ready to furnish him with Provisions, and not to insist on a more manifest Declaration, which would be of no Service towards a Decision of the War, no more than it had been in their declaring themselves last Year for his Predecessor, which had not in the least promoted his Cause, but had done vast Prejudice to the City. They would have him go then in God's Name, and overcome his Enemies, assuring himself that when he came Master out of the Field the City of Milan would most readily receive him. The King, who was at first greatly incensed against the Milaneſe <sup>Apology of the</sup> for their Refusal to receive Trivulzio, gave Milaneſe the Ambassadors a favourable Reception, <sup>accepted,</sup> and answered that he was content to comply with their Desires.

FROM Bufaloro the King proceeded with his Army to Biagrasſa, and while he ſtaid there the Duke of Savoy, after giving an Audience to Twenty Swiſs Ambassadors

A. D. 1515. bassadors sent to him at Vercelli, went, accompanied by the Bastard and the other Commissioners of the King, to Galera, and contracted a Peace with the Swiss in the Name of the King on the following Conditions: That there should be a perpetual Peace between the King and the Nation of the Swiss during the Life of the King, and Ten Years after his Death: That the Swiss and Grisons should restore the Valleys which they had seized belonging to the Dutchy of Milan: That they should discharge that State from the Obligation of paying them a yearly Pension of Forty Thousand Ducats: That the King should grant to Massimiliano the Dutchy of Nemours, with a yearly Pension of Twelve Thousand Livres, the Command of Fifty Lances, and a Wife of the Blood royal: That he should restore to the Swiss the antient Pension of Forty Thousand Livres: That he should bestow three Months pay on all the Swiss that were at present in Lombardy, or on their March thither; and pay to the Cantons at convenient Times Six Hundred Thousand Crowns promised by the Treaty of Dijon, besides besides Three Hundred Thousand for the <sup>A. D.</sup> Restitution of the Valleys; and that the <sup>1515.</sup> King should constantly keep Four Thousand Swiss in his Pay. The Powers nominated by common Consent were the Pope, in case he restored Parma and Piacenza, the Emperor, the Duke of Savoy, and the Marquis of Monferrato. But no Mention was made of the Catholic King, the Venetians, or any other Italian State.

BUT this Agreement was concluded <sup>Peace</sup> and broken off almost in one Day by the <sup>broken</sup> Arrival of a new Body of Swiss *, who <sup>off.</sup> animated by their past Victories, and in Hopes of acquiring no less Riches than those with which they saw their Companions loaded, were utterly averse to a Peace, and to obstruct it refused to restore the Valleys; so that the first Swiss being unable to repress the Ardor and Eagerness of the others, they removed their Camp, to the Number of Thirty-five Thousand, to Moncia, in order to take up their Quarters

of the Spanish and Ec-clesiastic
Armies.

THE Peace then being broken almost as soon as made, Affairs returned to their former difficult and doubtful Situation, and even in a much greater Degree by the Approach of new Forces and new Armies to the Dutchy of Milan. For the Viceroy, leaving Marc' Antonio Colonna with an Hundred Men at Arms, Sixty light Horfe, and Two Thousand German Foot in Garrison at Verona, and Twelve Hundred Germans in Brescia, was at last come to encamp on the Po near Piacenza with Seven Hundred Men at Arms, Six Hundred light Horfe, and Six Thousand Foot, and had laid a Bridge in Readiness for passing the River. And that he might have no just Cause of Complaint Lorenzo de'

de' Medici, who had for many Days very circumspectly halted at Parma with his Army of Seven Hundred Men at Arms, Eight Hundred light Horse, and Four Thousand Foot, removed to Piacenza.
 But he had before, at the Request of the Swiss, while they were treating with the French, sent Four Hundred light Horse commanded by Mutio Colonna, and Lodo- vico Count of Pitigliano, the first an Officer of the Church, and the other of the Florentines, to serve them in collecting Provisions ; and this he did not so much from a Desire to assist the common Cause, as to give no Occasion to the Swiss, if they came to an Accommodation with the King of France, to exclude the Pope from the Peace.

ON the other Side Bartolomeo d' Alviano, who had given the King Hopes that he would keep the Spanish Army employed so as not to have it in their Power to hurt him, as soon as he was informed that the Viceroy had left Verona, took his March from the Polesine of Rovigo, and passing the Adice, proceeded all along the Po, Expeditious

Alviano.

A. D. with Nine Hundred Men at Arms, Four-1515. teen Hundred light Horfe, Nine Thousand Foot, and a fuitable Train of Artillery, and was arrived with vast Expedition before the Walls of Cremona. Of this Swiftnefs, unusual with the Generals of our Times, Alviano used to boast, and compare it to that of Claudius Nero, when he led a Part of the Army ordered to op-pofe Asdrubal on the River Metauro*.

Situation
 of the Armies.

THUS was the State of War not only various, but confufed and much entangled.
 In the Neighbourhood of Milan, on one Side, was the King of France with an Army well provided with all Neceffaries, and now removed to Marignano, in order to facilitate his Conjunction with Alviano, and to obftruct that of the Spanifh and Ecclefiastic Troops with the Swifs: On the other Side lay an Army of Thirty-five Thoufand Swifs, a Body of Infantry full of Fiercenefs, and hitherto in refpect to the French invincible; the Viceroy on the Po, near Piacenza, and on the high Road to Lodi,

* Livy, Dec. III. Lib. 7. and Plutarch in his Life of Hannibal.

Lodi, with a Bridge laid for passing the A. D. River in order to join the Swiss; and in <sup>1515.</sup> Piacenza lay Lorenzo de' Medici, with the Troops of the Pope and the Florentines, ready to join the Viceroy for the same Purpose; Alviano, an active and daring Commander, was encamped with the Venetian Army in the Cremonese, almost on the Bank of the Po, in order to assist the King of France, either by joining him, or by diverting the Ecclesiastic and Spanish Armies. The City of Lodi, seated in the Middle at an equal Distance from Milan and Piacenza, was abandoned by all, but it had been first plundered by Renzo da Ceri while he was in the Venetian Service. For that Officer, on occasion of some Misunderstanding between him and Alviano, had lately by Protestations, and in a manner by Threatenings, obtained of the Senate his Dismission, and had lifted himself with Two Hundred Men at Arms, and Two Hundred light Horse, in the Service of the Pontiff; but not being able readily to get together all his Soldiers, because the Venetians had prevented many of them from going out of Padoua where they were

Y 2                      quartered,

A. D. 1515 { quartered, he was gone from Lodi in order to raise Recruits for filling up the Regiment with which he had been taken into Pay.

BUT the Cardinal of Sion, who, being before terrified by the Negotiations which his People held with the King of France, and by the wavering Disposition of the City of Milan, had with a Thousand Swiss, and Part of the Troops of the Duke of Milan fled to Piacenza, and from thence proceeded to Cremona to press the Viceroy to advance forwards, took his Way back from thence to Milan, before the French Army had obstructed that Road, leaving some of his Soldiers, tho' but few, to secure Lodi, who being alarmed at the Advance of the King of France to Marignano abandoned that City.

Pope secretly corresponds with the King of France. WHILE the Viceroy lay on the Bank of the Po, and before Lorenzo de' Medici was advanced to Piacenza, his Soldiers intercepted Cintio sent by the Pontiff to the King of France, and as there were found upon him Briefs and credential Letters, ters, though he immediately dismissed the A. D. Messenger out of Reverence to the Person <sup>1515.</sup> who had sent him, he began strongly to suspect that the Hopes which had been given him that the Ecclesiastic Army was to pass the Po in Conjunction with his own, were fruitless, and the rather because about the same time he had learnt that Lorenzo de' Medici had privately sent one of his own Attendants to the same King. And he was not wrongly informed; for Lorenzo, either from his own Motion, or by Command of the Pope, had sent to excuse himself to the King for leading an Army against him, on account of the Necessity he was under to obey the Pope, but that, as far as it was possible for him, without provoking the Indignation of his Uncle, or staining his own Honour, he would do his utmost Endeavours to satisfy him, as it had always been, and was now more than ever, his Desire.

BUT as soon as Lorenzo arrived at Piacenza, there began between the Viceroy and him with others that assisted <sup>Debate</sup> in Council, a Debate whether it were best <sup>on passing</sup> the Po.

A. D. 1515. to pass the Po in Conjunction, in order to join the Swiss, several Reasons offering on each Side. Those who were for passing the River alledged that there was no Reason to dissuade them from taking Possession of Lodi, and that while they were Masters of that Post, it would be difficult for Alviano to join the French Army, and practicable for themselves to join the Swiss, either by advancing towards Milan to seek them out, or by the Motion of the Swiss towards them; and if the French should post themselves, as it was reported to be their Design, or were already posted, on the Road between Lodi and Milan, they would have at their Backs the joint Forces of their Enemies, which could not but be troublesome and dangerous; and perhaps too it might not be difficult to find a Way, though by a greater Compass, to join with the Swiss: That this Resolution would be of great Service, and even necessary to the Enterprize, both for removing from the Swiss all Occasions of entering on new Treaties of Agreement, and for augmenting their Forces, of which they stood in Need against so great an Army, and especially especially with Horſe, of which they had <sup>A. D.</sup> none; and beſides it was no more than <sup>1515.</sup> what was required from the Faith and Honour of the Pontiff and Catholic King, who were obliged to ſuccour the State of Milan, and had ſo often profeſſed the Correſpondence of their Intentions to the Swiſs, who finding themſelves deceived, might from true and hearty Friends become moſt bitter Enemies; and, laſtly, that the Intereſt of their own proper States required ſuch a Step, becauſe if the Swiſs ſhould loſe the Battle, or make an Agreement with the King of France, there would be no Forces left in Italy ſufficient to reſtrain that Prince from over-running the whole Eccleſiaſtic State to the very Gates of Rome.

ON the other Side were offered many Reaſons, and this chiefly, that it was not to be ſuppoſed that the King had not by <sup>Reaſons</sup> this time ſent Troops to take Poſſeſſion of <sup>againſt it.</sup> Lodi, and if they ſhould find the French Maſters of that Place, it would be neceſſary for them to make a ſhameful Retreat, and, perhaps, not without Danger, ſince

they might have at the same time the French and Venetians either in Front or Flank, and the Bridge could not be re-passed without Time, and without some Confusion. Such a Risque might indeed be run, if the Reward were worth the Danger; but supposing that Lodi should be abandoned to their Possession, of what Service could it prove for promoting the Success of the Undertaking? How could it be deemed practicable, while so potent an Army was posted between Lodi and Milan, either for them to go and join the Swiss, or for the Swiss to come and join them? Besides, it might, perhaps, be a dangerous Step to entrust the whole Force of the Pontiff and the Catholic King in the Hands of that rash and unreasonable People, a great Part of whom, they knew, had made Peace with the King of France, and there were great Contentions between these and the others who opposed it.

At last it was resolved that the next Day both Armies should with all Expedition, without any Baggage, pass the Po, leaving good Garrisons in Parma and Piacenza

Piacenza for Fear of the Venetian Army, A. D. 1515. whose light Horse had for several Days been scouring and plundering all over the Country. In agreeing to this Resolution neither of the Parties, as it was then generally thought, acted with Sincerity, each thinking, by pretending a Willingness to pass, to transfer the Blame on the other, without putting himself in Danger. For the Viceroy entertaining a Jealousy of the Message of Cintio, and knowing with what Cunning and Artifice the Pope proceeded in his Affairs, persuaded himself that it was his Will that Lorenzo should not proceed any further: And Lorenzo, considering how loth the Viceroy was to put his Army in the Power of Fortune, formed the same Judgment of others that they passed upon him. In the Afternoon the Spanish Troops began to pass the Bridge, and were immediately to be followed by the Ecclesiastic Army; but by the Coming on of Night it being necessary to defer their Passage till the next Morning, they did not only not pass at all, but the Viceroy returned with his Army on this Side the River, on Advice, brought by Four Hundred

THE King of France at this same Time removed his Camp from Marignano to San Donato three Miles from Milan, in which City the Swiss assembled their whole Force, where one Party of them abhorring a War, and the other as much averse to a Peace, frequent Consultations were held, and many Tumults happened among them. At last, when they were met together in a full Assembly, the Cardinal of Sion, who was most ardent in his Exhortations to Perseverance in the War, began with most vehement and pathetic Words to stimulate them to delay no longer, but march out and attack the King of France that same Day, and not stand so much in Awe of the numerous Cavalry and Artillery of the Enemy, or suffer themselves to be so far disturbed as to lose

the Memory of the native Valour of the A. D.
Swiss, and the Victories obtained over the <sup>1515.</sup> French. “What, says Sion, have the <sup>Speech of</sup>

 Dangers, and spilt so much Blood to lose <sup>Sion to</sup> leave so great Renown and Reputation to Enemies whom we have overthrown?

 Are not these the same French who assisted

Novara? Are they not the same French who, astonished at our Valour, and confounded at Reflections on their own shameful Cowardice, have cried up to the Skies the Name of the Swiss? A Name famous when we were in Conjunction with them, but become more famous since we separated from them! Our Troops that fought at Novara had neither Cavalry nor Artillery, and expected a speedy Reinforcement; and yet at the Persuasions of Mottino,

A. D. Mottino, that illustrious Ornament of the 1515. Helvetians, they valiantly attacked the Enemy in their Trenches, boldly advanced to seize their Cannon, routed them, and slew their German Infantry till they had blunted their Weapons, and tired their Arms with the Slaughter. And can you think they will now have the Courage to expect the Charge of Forty Thousand Swiss, an Army strong and resolute enough to meet the Forces of the whole World united together in the Field? They will fly, believe me, at the very Report of our Coming. They have not ventured to approach so near Milan in Confidence of their own Valour, but in Hopes of your Divisions. The Person or Presence of their King will not support them, for out of Fear of endangering his Life or his State he will be the first to consult his own Safety, and induce the rest to follow his Example. If you dare not attack them with this Army, that is, with the whole Strength of Swisserland, with what Forces can you ever hope to resist them? For what End are we descended into Lombardy?
 To what Purpose is our Arrival at Milan, if if we thought we should be afraid to <sup>A. D.</sup> encounter with the Enemy? What <sup>1515.</sup> will become of the lofty Speeches, and fierce Menaces that we have been throwing out all this Year, when we boasted of a Design to make a Descent into Burgundy, and when we rejoiced at the Agreement with the King of England, and at the Inclination of the Pontiff to confederate with the King of France, as imagining that the more the Powers were which united against the State of Milan, the more Glory we should acquire in defending it? It would have been better for us not to have obtained such noble Victories for these Years past, and not to have driven the French out of Italy, but to have rested satisfied within the Bounds of our antient Renown, rather than afterwards with one Consent to deceive the Expectations of all the World by betraying such base Cowardice. This Day will all Men judge whether the Victory of Novara were owing to our Bravery or to Fortune. If we shew ourselves afraid of the Enemy, it will be universally ascribed either to Chance or Temerity; if we exert the same Resolution, every

A. D. every one will confess that we are indebted 1515. for it only to our own Valour, and having, as no doubt we shall have, the same Success, we shall not only be the Terror of the present Age, but also had in Veneration by Posterity, whose Judgment and Praises will exalt the Name of the Swiss above that of the Romans, of whom we do not read that they shewed such Undauntedness, or obtained any Victory with so much Valour, or ever without Necessity chose to fight against Enemies under such great Disadvantages. Of us they will find it recorded that we fought a Battle near Novara, where with few Troops, without Artillery, without Cavalry, we put to Flight a mighty Army, furnished with all Manner of Provisions, and commanded by two famous Generals, one without Doubt the best in all France, and the other the best in all Italy. They will read also the Battle at San Donato, fought with the same Difficulties on our Side, against the King of France in Person, and against so great a Number of German Infantry, who, the more numerous they are, will fall the more acceptable Sacrifice to our Hatred, make it so much the easier for us to ruin <sup>A. D.</sup> for ever their Military, and the more ef- <sup>1515.</sup>fectually deter them from rashly pretending to rival the Arms of the Swiss. It is not certain, but on the contrary, from many Difficulties appears even impossible, that we shall be joined by the Viceroy or the Troops of the Church; and therefore to what Purpose is it to expect them? Nor is their Presence necessary; nay we ought rather to be pleased at such a Disappointment, for now all the Honour will be ours, and the vastly rich Spoils and Plunder of the Enemy's Camp will be all our own. Mottino would not suffer the Glory to be communicated even to ourselves, much less to others. And shall we be so base-minded, and set so low a Price upon our Valour, as, even supposing it possible for us to join them, to be willing to wait in order to be Sharers in so great a Profusion of Honours and Praises with Strangers? Neither the Fame of the Swiss, nor the State of Affairs require any further Delay or Consultation: It is now necessary that we should be on our March, now, now is the Time to hasten and attack the Enemy.

A. D. 1515. Enemy. Let Cowards consult, who think not of encountering with Dangers, but of securing themselves by Flight ; but it is the Part of a fierce and warlike Nation, such as ours, to present themselves before their Enemies as soon as they can get a Sight of them. Go to, then, with the Help of God, who with just Hatred pursues the Pride of the French, with your usual Animosity take your Pikes, and beat your Drums, and let us march without losing a Moment, and hasten to try the utmost Force of our Weapons, and satiate our Hatred with the Blood of those whose Pride renders them a Nuisance, and their Cowardice a Prey to all Mankind."

INCITED by this Speech the Swiss immediately took their Arms in a Fury, and as soon as they were got out at the Roman Gate drew up in Order, and tho' there remained not much of Daylight set forwards on their March towards the French with so much Alacrity, and such Shouting, that one who knew no better would have taken it for certain that they had had already obtained some very notable Victory. The Officers stimulated the Soldiers to quicken their March, and the Soldiers desired their Officers not to forget to give the Signal of Battle as soon as ever they were approached to the Camp of the Enemy; for they were determined to strew the Field with Carcasses, and intended that Day to extinguish the very Name of the German Infantry; and especially of those Troops which prognosticating their own Death carried by way of Distinction black Ensigns. In this fierce and resolute Disposition they approached the French Camp, and but two Hours before Night began the Battle. They attacked the Artillery and Entrenchments with such Fury and Violence, that they entered the Trenches almost as soon as they arrived, and broke and dispersed the first Battalions that opposed them, and made themselves Masters of Part of the Artillery. But the French Cavalry advancing, and a great Part of the Army, with the King himself, surrounded by a valiant Squadron of Gentlemen, the Ardor of their Fury was in some measure reno.

A. D. pressed, and there began a very terrible 1515. Battle, attended with various Events, but very destructive to the French Men at Arms, who were forced to give Way.
This Fight lasted till four Hours after Night, in which some of the French general Officers were killed on the Spot, and the King himself received many Thrusts of Pikes. By this Time both Parties were so tired that they could no longer hold their Weapons in their Hands, and separated from one another without Beat of Drum, or Orders from their Officers, the Swiss betaking themselves to their Rest in the Field of Battle, and neither Party molesting the other, but expecting, as it were by a tacit Truce, the next Daylight. But the first Attack proving so successful to the Swiss, for whom by the Care of the Cardinal a Convoy of Provisions and Refreshments from Milan arrived while they were taking their Repose, Expresses were dispatched to all Parts of Italy with Advices that the Swiss had put the Army of their Enemies to Flight. The King was not idle during the Remainder of the Night, but being sensible sensible of the Greatness of the Danger <sup>A D.</sup> took care to draw off his Artillery into <sup>1515.</sup> proper Places and in due Order, and employed himself in ranging his German and Gascon Infantry in just Battalions, and his Cavalry in Squadrons. When Daylight appeared the Swiss, despising not only the French Army but all the Forces of Italy united together, renewed their Attack with the same Rage and Impetuosity, and with great Temerity. They were valiantly received by their Enemies, but with more Policy, and in better Order, for on one Side they were galled by the Cannon, on the other by the Arrows of the Gascons, and at the same time charged by the Horse, so that they suffered in Front and on both Flanks. And at Sunrise, when the Fight was closest and fiercest, and Circumstances reduced to an Extremity of Labour and Danger, Alviano, who, on the Arrival of an Express from the King over Night, had immediately put himself in Motion with the light Horse and the most expeditious Part of his Army, the rest following Body after Body, arrived on a sudden, and fell with great Fury on the Rear of the Swiss, who, tho' they still maintained the Fight with the greatest Boldness and Valour, yet finding so vigorous a Resistance, and from the Arrival of the Venetian Army despairing of the Victory, several Hours after Sunrise founded a Retreat, and putting their Shoulders to the Artillery which they had brought with them, turned their Battalions, and constantly keeping their usual Order marched with a slow Pace towards Milan, to the great Astonishment of the French, of whom not a Man in all the Army, either among their Foot or Horse, durst venture to pursue them; only two of their Companies, who had fled into a Country Seat, were burnt in it by the Venetian light Horse. The rest of their Army retired in perfect Order, and retaining the same Fierceness in their Countenances, and in their Eyes, returned to Milan, leaving behind them in the Ditches, as some say, fifteen Pieces of heavy Cannon, which they had taken from the French in the first Attack, for Want of Conveniences to bring them along.

 defeated.

IT is universally agreed that a fiercer and more terrible Battle had not been fought in Italy for very many Years; for by the Fury with which the Swiss began the Attack, and afterwards by the Mistakes through the Darknefs of the Night, the Arrangement of the whole Army being disordered, and the Combatants mingling in Confusion without Command or Signal, every Event was left entirely to the Disposal of Fortune. The King himself was often in Danger, and was more indebted for his Preservation to his own proper Valour, and to Chance, than to the Assistance of his Attendants, by whom he was frequently in the Confusion of the Battle, and the Darknefs of the Night, abandoned. Hence Trivulzio, a General who had seen so many Events, protested that this was a Battle not of Men but of Giants, and that of Eighteen Battles in which he had been present, every one of them, in Comparison of this, was but a Battle of little Children. And it is not doubted that, had it not been for the Assistance of the Artillery, the Victory on the Battle.

A. D. 1515. would have been gained by the Swiss, who having entered the French Entrenchments at the first Attack, and afterwards made themselves Masters of most Part of their Artillery, had always gained Ground. Besides, the Coming of Alviano was of no small Importance, since his Arrival at a Time while the Victory was yet dubious put Spirits in the French, and Terror in the Swiss, who imagined that he had brought with him the whole Venetian Army.

of Killed

THE Number of the Dead, if ever it were uncertain in any Battle, as it is almost in all, was very uncertain in this, People varying in their Accounts, some out of Passion, others through Ignorance. Some make the Loss of the Swiss amount to above Fourteen Thousand, others will have it but Ten Thousand, others again more moderate make it but Eight Thousand, and there are not wanting some who reduce it so low as Three Thousand, all of the vulgar Sort, and of Names obscure. But of the French were killed in the Battle of the Night Francis Brother to

to the Duke of Bourbon, Imbercourt, San- cerre, the Prince of Tallemont Son to <sup>A. D. 1515.</sup> Tremouille, Boysi Nephew to the late Cardinal of Rouen, Count Saffart, Chatelarth of Savoy, Bussi d'Amboise, and Mouy, Ensign of the King's Gens. d' Arms, Persons all distinguished by their Nobility and great Estates, or for their honourable Posts in the Army. The Number of the Killed is for the Reasons before assigned variously reckoned, some making it Six Thousand, others reducing it to Three Thousand, among whom were some Officers of the German Infantry.

AFTER the Swiss were retired to Milan they fell into very great Disagreement whether it were best to enter into a Convention with the King of France, or stay there for the Defence of the City. Those Officers who had before solicited an Agreement, being willing to alledge some less dishonourable Reason for their Departure, demanded their Pay of Massimi- liano Sforza, who, it was very manifest, had no Money to spare; and the next Day afterwards all the Swiss Troops, at

A. D. the Persuasions of Rost their Captain 1515. General, set out on their March home-Swiss re- wards by the Way of Como, giving Hopes turn home to the Duke that they would soon return to the Relief of the Castle, in which was left a Garrison of Fifteen Hundred Swiss and Five Hundred Italian Foot.
 With these Hopes Massimiliano Sforza, accompanied by Giovanni da Gonzaga, and Girelamo Morone, with some other Milaneſe Noblemen, betook himself to the Castle, after giving his Consent, tho' not without Difficulty, that Francesco Duke of Bari, his Brother, might retire into Germany, while the Cardinal of Sion went to wait upon Cæſar to ſolicit Succours, promiſing to return within a few Days. The City of Milan being thus left without any Garrison ſurrendered to the King of France, and agreed to pay a very large Sum of Money *; but he re-fuſed to enter the Place while the Castle was in the Hands of the Enemy, as if it were unworthy of a King to make his ordered solemn Masses to be celebrated for A. D. three Days successively in the Place where <sup>1515.</sup> he had obtained the Victory; the first to return Thanks to God for his Success, the Second to pray for the Souls of those that were killed in the Battle, and the last to beseech God to grant a Peace; and on the same Spot he caused a Chapel to be erected for a perpetual Memorial. All the Towns and Fortresses of the Dutchy of Milan followed the Fortune of the Victory, except the Castles of Cremona and Milan, the Siege of which last was committed to the Direction of Pietro Navarra, who, to the Admiration of all Men, tho' the Castle was very strong, abundantly supplied with all Necessaries for its Defence, and had a Garrison of Two Thousand good Soldiers, engaged to reduce it within a Month,

THE Viceroy, on the News of the Victory of the French, stayed a few Days in his old Quarters, more out of Necessity than Choice, because it was difficult for him to put his Army in Motion without Money. At length, receiving a certain Quantity,

A. D. Quantity, and borrowing Six Thousand 1515. Ducats of Lorenzo de' Medici, he decamped, and retired to Pontenuro, with an Intention to march for the Kingdom of Naples.
 For though the Pontiff, on Advice of the unfortunate Event, had at first made the Public believe that he intended to imitate the Constancy of his Predecessor, the Ambassadors of the Allies encouraging him to resolve on shewing his Face to Fortune, and endeavour by all means to keep the Swiss in a good Disposition, or if they proved inconstant to supply their Places with hired German Infantry, yet on a serious Review it appeared to him that no Provisions for his Safety could be made with that Speed which his Danger required, and that the first Blow was likely to fall upon himself. For though the Reverence of the Church might induce the King of France to abstain from molesting the Ecclesiastic State, yet he did not believe it sufficient to restrain him from attacking Parma and Piacenza as Members of the Dutchy of Milan, or from molesting the State of Florence, in which Affair all Regard ceased, and yet the Pope would think sions from think himself as much injured as if an At- A. D. 1515. tack had been made upon the State of the Church. Nor indeed were his Apprehensions groundless, for the King had ordered a Bridge to be laid over the Po near Pavia for passing Troops to take Possession of Parma and Piacenza, and after the Acquisition of these Cities, if the Pope still continued averse to embrace the King's Friendship, the Forces were intended to proceed by the Way of Pontremoli to Tus- cany, and attempt to drive the Medici out of Florence.

BUT by this Time the Pope had given Commission to the Duke of Savoy, and the Bishop of Tricarico, his Nuncio, to enter into a Treaty with the King of France, who being still suspicious of new Confederacies against him, and inclined to the Reverence of the Apostolic See by the Terror which the Persecutions of Julius had excited in the whole Kingdom of France, was very desirous of an Agreement. A Confede- Pope enters into an Alliance with the King of France. racy therefore was soon concluded between them for the Defence of the States of Italy; and particularly it was stipulated that the King

A. D. King should take into his Protection the 1515. Person of the Pontiff, the State of the Church, Giuliano, Lorenzo de' Medici, and the State of Florence; should grant a Lordship in France and a Pension to Giuliano and to Lorenzo, with the Command of fifty Lances; and consent that the Pontiff should grant free Passage through the State of the Church to the Viceroy on his Return with his Army into the Kingdom of Naples: That the Pope should be obliged to recall his Troops from Verona, and from the Assistance of Cæsar against the Venetians; that he should restore to the King the Cities of Parma and Piacenza, in Compensation of which the Dutchy of Milan should be bound to take all its Salt from Cervia, which was computed to be very beneficial to the Church, and had lately been stipulated by the Pope in his Confederacy with the Duke of Milan: That it should be referred to the Arbitration of the Duke of Savoy whether the Florentines had violated the Confederacy made with King Lewis, and in Case of any Violation the Duke was to declare the Penalty. This Article the King said he insisted on more for the Sake of his Honour than for any other Reason.

A. D.

THE Treaty being concluded Tricarico immediately set out Post for Rome, to persuade the Pontiff to ratify it: And Lorenzo, that he might the sooner be rid of the Viceroy, withdrew the Troops he had in Piacenza to Parma and Reggio, and he himself waited on the King, to recommend himself to his Favour, and to persuade him, according to the artful Instructions of his Uncle, that he desired in all Events to depend only on his royal Protection.

THE Pope was not without Difficulty induced to ratify the Peace, for it grieved him very much to part with Parma and Piacenza, and he would willingly have waited till he had first known the Resolution of the Swiss. The Diet of that Nation was assembled at Zurich, the principal of all the Helvetic Cantons, and the greatest Enemy to the French, where they treated about succouring the Castle of Milan; though they had abandoned the Valleys and the Towns of Bellinzona and Lugarna,

King, on the Payment of Six Thousand Crowns to the Governor, had gotten Possession of the Castle of Lugarna; but the Grisons had not as yet abandoned Chiavenna. Tricarico, however, at last representing to his Holiness that it was to be feared the King would without Delay attack Parma and Piacenza, and send Troops into Tuscany, and magnifying the Loss of the Swiss in the Battle, he was content to ratify, but with these Qualifications and Restrictions: That neither he himself nor his Agents for him should be bound to make a formal Cession of Parma and Piacenza, but only leave them evacuated of his Troops and civil Officers for the King to take Possession of them; that the Pontiff should not be bound to withdraw his Troops from Verona, because he was not willing to do such an Injury to Cesar, but he secretly promised to recall them on the first convenient Opportunity; and that the Florentines should be absolved from any pretended Contravention of the League. In this Agreement it was also provided that the King should not take under under his Protection any Feudatary or Subject of the State of the Church, and should not only not obstruct the Pope, as their supreme Lord, in proceeding against them, and chastising them, but should also be obliged, when solicited, to assist him for that Purpose. Mention was also made of an Interview between the Pope and the King in some convenient Place; which was proposed by Francis, but desired by both Parties; by the King, for the better Establishment of this newly contracted Friendship, for securing the States of his Friends in Italy, and because he was in Hopes by his Presence, and by his Offers of large Estates to the Pontiff's Brother and Nephew, to obtain his Consent for attacking, as he most ardently desired, the Kingdom of Naples; by the Pope, with a View, by this officious Condescension, to entertain the King, while he was in his Prosperity, after his engaging Manner, by which he was most excellently qualified for winning upon the Hearts of Men. Many, however, condemned such a Resolution as unworthy of the Majesty of the Pontificate, judging it more

A. D. more proper for the King, if he wanted 1515. such an Interview, to come and seek it of the Pope at Rome. But his Holiness alledged in Excuse that he condescended in this Manner from a Desire to induce the King to forbear molesting the Kingdom of Naples during the Life of the Catholic King, which, on account of an Indisposition of Body, under which he had laboured above a Year, it was thought, could not be long.

Castle of Milan besieged. IN the mean time Pietro Navarra was busily employed in besieging the Castle of Milan, and having made himself Master of a Casemate in the Ditch of the Castle on the Flank towards the Gate of Como, and with Engines for Battery and Fences of Beams*, made his Approaches to the Ditch and to the Wall of the Castle, he worked at a Mine in that Place, and having ruined the Defences, he set about several other Mines, and with large Chissels cut off a great Piece of the Wall on the Flank of the Castle, which he supported with Props, <sup>A. D.</sup> in order to make it fall at the same Time <sup>1515.</sup> that he set Fire to the Mines. But tho' these Contrivances were not, in the Opinion of many, sufficient to reduce the Place without much Time and Difficulty, and certain Advice was received that the Swiss, according to the Resolution taken in the Diet of Zurich, were preparing to relieve it, yet by virtue of a Treaty commenced between Giovanni da Gonzaga, a General of the Duke of Milan, who was in the Castle, and the Duke of Bourbon his Kinsman, and afterwards carried on with the Duke of Bourbon by Girolamo Morone in concert with two Swiss Officers in the Castle, to the great Surprise of all the World, a Capitulation was concluded <sup>Surrendered.</sup> on the fourth of October. Girolamo Morone was highly blamed on this Occasion for having, either out of too much Timidity, or too little Faithfulness, persuaded the Duke, with whom he had a very great Authority, to this Agreement; but he excused himself on account of a Quarrel that broke out between the Swiss and Italian Infantry in Garrison.

THE HISTORY OF

By the Conditions of this Capitulation Massimiliano Sforza was immediately to deliver up to the King of France the Castles of Milan and Cremona, and to make over to him all the Rights which he had to the State of Milan: On this Consideration it was agreed that he should receive of the King a certain Sum of Money to discharge his Debts, and might retire into France, where the King was to allow him a yearly Pension of Thirty Thousand Ducats, or use his Interest that he should be created a Cardinal with the like Revenue: That the King should pardon Galcazzo Visconti and certain other Noblemen of the Dutchy of Milan who had been zealous in the Interest of Massimiliano: That he should give the Swiss who were in the Castle Six Thousand Crowns: That he should confirm to Giovanni da Gonzaga those Estates which the Duke had given to him in the Milanese, and settle a Pension on him; and should also confirm to Morone his patrimonial Estates, and those which were bestowed on him by the Duke, with the Offices that that he held, and should constitute him A. D.

Master of Requests of the Court of France. 1515.

On this Agreement Massimiliano, otherwise Moro after his Father's Name, came out of the Castle, and set out directly for France, saying at his Departure that he was delivered from the Bondage of the Swiss, the Abuses of Cæsar, and the Cheats of the Spaniards. Every one however praised Fortune more for her Justice in speedily deposing from so high a Station, than for her Blindness in exalting to it, a Man who, from his Want of Capacity, the Extravagance of his Sentiments, and the extreme Sordidness of his Manners, was unworthy of any Post of Honour or Greatness.

BUT before the Castle of Milan was surrendered came Ambassadors to the Venetian King Antonio Grimano, Domenico Trivisano, Giorgio Cornaro, and Andrea Gritti, Embassy to the King of France, four of the principal and most honourable Members of the Venetian Senate, to congratulate him on his Victory, and to request his Assistance, to which he was bound by the Articles of the Confederacy,

A. D. in the Recovery of their Towns: An for the Viceroy, after leaving the Territory of Piacenza, and then halting ſome time in the Modenſe, to ſee whether the Pope would ratify the Agreement he had made with the King of France, as ſoon as he was certified of the Ratification, proceeded on his March through Romagna for Naples.

THE King readily ordered to the Aſſiſtance of the Venetians the Baſtard of Savoy and Teodoro da Trivulzio, with Seven Hundred Lances and Seven Thouſand Foot ; but while they delayed their March, either in Expectation of the Succeſs of the Enterprife on the Caſtle of Milan, or becauſe the King deſigned theſe ſame Troops for the Siege of the Caſtle marched with the Army towards Brescia. } 1515.

But the Garrison being just before reinforced with One Thousand German Foot, Bergamo having several Days before surrendered to the Venetians, he resolved to march first and lay Siege to Verona, as not so well fortified, and for the greater Conveniency of Provisions, and because if Verona were taken, Brescia remaining alone, and difficult, on account of its Situation, to be succoured from Germany, would fall an easy Conquest. But this Undertaking was retarded from an Apprehension that the Viceroy and the Troops of the Pope, which were in the Territories of Reggio and Modena, would pass the Po at Ostia in order to relieve Verona; all Fears of which now vanishing at the Departure of the Viceroy, a new Obstacle arose from the Sicknefs of Alviano, who was taken ill at Gbedi in the Brescian, and departed this Life in the Beginning of Death and October under Sixty Years of Age, mightily regretted by the Venetians, but much Character membrance, kept his Body twenty-five Days in the Army, carrying it about with them wherever they marched with extraordinary Pomp; and when it was afterwards to be conveyed to Venice, Teodoro Trivulzio would not suffer a Pass to be demanded, as many had proposed, of Marc' Antonio Colonna for its free Passage through the Veronese, saying, it was not fit that a Man who was never afraid of Enemies in his Lifetime should give any Sign that he feared them after his Death. He was interred by public Decree with extraordinary Marks of Honour in St. Stephen's Church at Venice, where his Monument is still to be seen, and the funeral Oration was made by Andrea Navagiero, a young Venetian Nobleman of great Eloquence. Alviano was by every one acknowledged to be a General of vast Boldness and Courage, and one who executed his Resolutions with the utmost Expedition; but, either through the Malice of Fortune, or, as many were of Opinion, because he was rash and precipitous in taking his Measures, was frequently defeated by his Enemies, and perhaps, what

Trivulzio
of the
Venetians.

ON the Death of Alviano the King, at the Request of the Venetians, granted Leave to Trivulzio to take upon him the Command of their Army. They desired him for their General on account of his Skill and Reputation in military Discipline, and because, from their common Inclination to the Faction of the Guelfs, there had been always a good Correspondence and mutual Benevolence maintained between him and that Republic. While the new General was proceeding to the Army the Troops of the Venetians took Peschiera, after they had first routed Three Hundred Spanish Foot, and some Horse that were coming to relieve it; they next recovered Afola and Lona, which were abandoned by the Marquis of Mantoua.

ON the Arrival of Trivulzio the Army, at the Instances of the Senate, laid Siege to Brescia, tho' it appeared to him very difficult to be taken without the Assistance of the French, for the Town was strong,

A. D. and had Two Thousand German and <sup>1515.</sup> Spanish Foot in Garrison, a very considerable Number of the Guelfs had been forced to leave the Place, the Winter was just at Hand, and the Season seemed much disposed to Rains. The General was not deceived in his Judgment of the Event of the Undertaking; for after they had begun to play on the Walls from a Battery planted on the Ditch at the Side whence the Rivulet Garzetta takes its Course, the Garrison, which made frequent Sallies, took once an Opportunity to march out to the Number of Fifteen Hundred German and Spanish Foot in order to attack the Guard of the Artillery, for which Service were appointed One Hundred Men at Arms, and Six Thousand Foot, and charged them so vigorously, while others of the Besieged, who were disposed along the Walls for that Purpose, with their small Arms kept a continual Fire, that they easily put them to Flight, tho' Gian Pagolo Manfrone with Thirty Men at Arms for some time sustained their Fury. They killed about Two Hundred Foot, set Fire to the Powder, and brought off

Ten Pieces of Cannon into Brescia. On A. D. this Disaster Trivulzio thought fit to re-<sup>1515.</sup> move the Army to a greater Distance from the Town, in Expectation of the French, and retired to Coccai twelve Miles from that City, the Venetians in the mean time taking care to provide a new Supply of Cannon and Ammunition. When the French had joined them they returned to the Siege, and erected Batteries in two different Places, one on the Side of the Gate of the Pile towards the Castle, and the other on the Side of the Gate of San Giovanni. In one of these Posts lay encamped the French Army, which, on the Dismission of the Germans because they would not fight against a Town in the Possession of Cæsar, was reinforced with Five Thousand Gascon and French Foot under Pietro Navarra. The other was possessed by the Venetians commanded by Trivulzio, on whom lay the whole Care and Burden of the War, for the Bastard of Savoy was taken ill, and had left the Army. A Breach was made, but the Assault was not given because the Besieged had drawn Trenches, and cast up Ramparts,

A. D. parts, and with vast Diligence and Reso-1515. lution provided every Thing necessary for their Defence. Pietro Navarra therefore had recourse to his usual Remedy, and set about constructing of Mines, and at the same time cutting the Wall with Pickaxes.

ACTION of
M. Anto- nio Colonna.
 AT this Time Marc' Antonio Colonna marched out of Verona with Six Hundred Horse, and Five Hundred Foot, and meeting on the Plains with Gian Pagolo Manfrone and Mercurio Bua, who with Four Hundred Men at Arms and Four Hundred light Horse were appointed to garrison Valeggio, he charged and broke them, in which Encounter Giulio Son of Gian Pagolo, his Horse being killed under him while he was fighting, was taken Prisoner, and his Father fled to Goito; the victorious Party afterwards took Possession of Lignago, where they made some Venetian Noblemen Prisoners.

BUT at Brescia the Siege appeared more and more difficult and incommo-dious, for the Mines prepared by Pietro Navarra

Navarra did not succeed according to the <sup>A. D.</sup> Expectations he had given, and Intelli-<sup>1515.</sup>gence being received that Eight Thousand Foot were on their March from Germany to succour the Place, which the Generals before Brescia could not warrant from taking Effect, it it was at last agreed by the Venetians, to cover in some Measure the Shame of a Retreat, that the Garrison, if not relieved within thirty Days, should deliver up the City, and the Venetians promised that they should have Liberty to march out with Colours flying, with the Artillery and all their Effects. This Engagement every one knew to be of no Signification, so well were they assured of Succours; but it was of some Service to the People in Brescia, by freeing them in the mean time from Molestations. The Venetians after this sent Eight Thousand Foot to Bre, a Castle belonging to the Counts of Lodrone; but as soon as these Troops perceived the German Foot, who had taken Possession of the Castle of Anfo by Surrendry, advancing forwards, they cowardly retreated to the Army. Nor were there to be found greater Marks of Resolution

A. D. 1515. Resolution in the Generals, who, under terrible Apprehensions of being at the same time attacked by the Troops from Germany, by those in Brescia, and by Marc' Antonio with the Garrison of Verona, retired to Gbedi, whither they had before, for fear of such a Disaster, sent their heavy Artillery, and almost all their Baggage. Thus the Germans entered Brescia without Opposition, and as soon as they had supplied the Place with Provisions, and increased the Garrison, returned to Germany.

IN the mean time the Pope and the King of France had agreed on an Interview at Bologna, the King chusing that Place rather than Florence, because he would not be at so great a Distance from the Dutchy of Milan, especially since he was continually treating, by the Mediation of the Duke of Savoy, of an Accommodation with the Swiss, and because, as he said, it would have been necessary, if he passed into Tuscany, to lead with him a great Train of Soldiers, since it would not be suitable to his Honour to enter Florence with less Pomp than King

THE WARS IN ITALY. 381

Charles had done before him, and the Preparations for such a Solemnity would have caused a Delay of some Days, which would have been very disagreeable to the King, as well in other Respects, as because he would have been necessitated to keep on Foot his whole Army, no Part of which, though it was very expensive, he had as yet disbanded, nor intended to disband while he stayed in Italy. The Pontiff then entered Bologna the Eighth Day of December, and two Days after the King made his Entry, having been received on the Borders of the Reggian by two Apostolic Legates, the Cardinals of Fiesco and de' Medici. He was attended by no Men at Arms, nor by any great Retinue, and being introduced, according to Custom, into the public Consistory before the Pontiff, he himself in Person, the Grand Chancellor making a Speech in his Name, offered him his Obedience, which he had not paid before. After this they held Communication for three Days together, being lodged in the same Palace, and shewing one towards another extraordinary Marks of mutual Benevolence and Affection,

France.

A. D. 1515. section. On this Occasion, besides confirming anew both by Words and Promises the Obligations formerly contracted, they had long Conferences about the Affairs of the Kingdom of Naples, which the King not being provided to attack at that Time, contented himself with the warm and hearty Assurances given him by the Pontiff of his favouring that Enterprize whenever they should hear of the Death of the King of Aragon, which in common Opinion could not be far off, or else as soon as his Confederacy with that Prince, which would terminate in sixteen Months, should expire. The King interceded also for the Restitution of Modena and Reggio to the Duke of Ferrara, which the Pope promised to restore on the Duke's reimbursing him the Forty Thousand Ducats which he had paid to Cæsar for Modena, besides a certain Sum of Money in Recompence for what he had expended on those Cities. The King interposed also his Mediation in Favour of Francesco Maria Duke of Urbino. This Duke had the Command of Two Hundred Men at Arms in the Service of the Church, and was appointed to attend
Giuliano

Giuliano de' Medici to the Army. But A. D.
Giuliano falling sick, and Lorenzo consti-<sup>1515.</sup> tuted General in his Stead, the Duke not only refused to go, alledging that though, for the Sake of his old Friendship with Giuliano, he had, contrary to his Dignity, consented to attend him as a simple Officer, and subject to the Command of others, in the Army of the Church, of which he had been so often Captain General, and superior to all, he would not yield the same Submission to Lorenzo, but besides, after he had promised to send the Troops that were under his Command, recalled them when they were upon their March. For it seems he had just before secretly agreed, or was then treating of an Agreement, with the King of France, and after the Victory of the King never ceased, by means of proper Persons, to incense him, as much as he could, against the Pontiff. His Holiness, mindful of these Injuries, and having before projected to transfer that Dutchy to his own Family, denied the King's Request, representing to him, in the mildest Expressions, how difficult it would be with regard to the Affairs of the Church

A. D. Church to grant his Demand, and how 1515. pernicious an Example it must prove for encouraging Subjects to rebel against their Sovereigns. The King patiently submitted to the Reasons and Will of the Pontiff, though he had desired, for his own Honour, to preserve the Duke, who was fallen into Danger for his Adherence to him; and he was advised also to take him under his Protection by many of his Council and Court, who represented how unpolitic a Resolution it had been in the late King to permit Valentino to oppress the petty Sovereigns of Italy, by which he rose to such Grandeur, that, if his Father Alexander had lived much longer, he would without Doubt have done much Mischief to his Affairs. The Pope promised the King to grant him Power to levy, for one Year, the Tenth Part of the Ecclesiastic Revenues in the Kingdom of France. It was agreed also that the King should have the Nomination of Benefices, which before belonged to the Colleges and Chapters of Churches; an Ordinance of great Advantage to the Kings of France, who by that Means had the Disposal of so

so many vastly rich Benefices ; and on the other Side his Majesty consented that the Annates of the Churches of France should be paid to the Pontiff according to the true Value, and not according to the antient Rates, which were much less. But in this Article the Pope found himself deceived, for when he designed to prosecute those who concealed the true Value, and had deputed Commissaries in the Kingdom of France for that Purpose, no Documents were to be had, nor Prosecutions obtained against the Incumbents, so that every one continued to pay according to the old Rates. The King also promised not to take under his Protection any of the Cities of Tuscany ; but not long after, on soliciting the Pope's Consent for receiving into his Protection the Lucchese, who had offered him Twenty-five Thousand Ducats, alledging that he was bound to it by the Obligations of his Predecessor, his Holiness refused to grant it, though he promised to give no manner of Molestation to that People. They resolved also to send Egidio, General of the Augustin Friars, and a most excellent Preacher, to the

A. D. 1515. Emperor in the Name of the Pope, in order to dispose him to restore Brescia and Verona to the Venetians, and to accept of a Recompense in Money. These Affairs being dispatched, though nothing was put in Writing except the Articles relating to the Nomination to Benefices, and the Payment of the Annates according to the true Value, the Pope, to oblige the King, declared Cardinal Adrian de Boisi, Brother to the Grand Master of France, and Prime Minister. The King afterwards departed highly satisfied with this Conference, and in great Hopes of the Good-will of the Pontiff, who shewed all the outward Marks of mutual Satisfaction, but his inward Sentiments were very different, for he was still grieved as before that the King should be in Possession of the Dutchy of Milan, and he was extremely chagrined at his being obliged to relinquish Piacenza and Parma, and no less at the Restitution of Modena and Reggio to the Duke of Ferrara, though the Performance of this last Article was not long after eluded. For the Pope, while he was in Florence, where he staid a Month after his Departure from Bologna,

THE WARS IN ITALY. 387

Bologna, being promised the Money which <sup>A. D.</sup> the Duke was to pay as soon as he should <sup>1515.</sup> be put in Possession of the said Cities, and Writings being drawn between them for that Effect by common Consent, would not plainly deny to fulfil the Agreement, but by interposing various Excuses and Delays, and always promising fairly, could never be brought to have it put in Execution.

THE King, after his Return to Milan, <sup>1516.</sup> immediately disbanded his Army, retaining only, for the Defence of that State, Seven Hundred Lances, Six Thousand German Foot, and Four Thousand French, of that Kind of Soldiery, which they call Volunteers; and in the Beginning of the Year 1516 he returned with the utmost Expedition into France, leaving as his Lieutenant Charles Duke of Bourbon. He now imagined his Affairs in Italy on a good Footing by the Confederacy he had contracted with the Pope, because he had much about the same time made a Convention with the Swiss, who, tho' stimulated by the King of England to take the Field afresh against him, renewed the Confederacy, obliging themselves at all Times to furnish him, in the Name and with the Ensigns of the Public, with any Number of Foot he should demand to take into his Pay, to serve either in Italy or elsewhere, and to act as well offensively as defensively against any Power, except only offensively against the Pope, the Empire, or Cæsar. On the other Hand the King confirmed their antient Pensions, and promised to pay them at certain Times the Six Hundred Thousand Ducats stipulated at Dijon, besides Three Hundred Thousand more when they restored the Towns and Valleys belonging to the Dutchy of Milan. But the five Cantons which were in Possession of them refusing to restore them, and to ratify the Agreement, the King began to pay the other eight Cantons their proportionate Share of the Money, who accepted it, but with an express Condition of not being bound to march in his Pay against the five Cantons.

IN the Beginning of this Year the Bishop of Petrucchi, an old Acquaintance of the Pontiff, assisted by him and the <sup>Pope's</sup> Florentines, expelled Borghese, the Son of <sup>Design</sup> Pandolfo Petrucci his Kinsman, who had <sup>upon</sup> the Government of Siena, from that City, and took upon himself the same Authority. What induced the Pope to this Step was his Desire that Siena, being situated between the State of the Church and that of the Florentines, should be governed by one who was at his Devotion, and perhaps much more his Hopes that whenever the Times should favour him with an Opportunity, he might, with the Consent of the Bishop himself, bring it under Subjection either to his Brother or to his Nephew,

THE Affairs of Italy were still embroiled by the Disputes between Cæsar and the Venetians, the Republic being eager to recover Brescia and Verona by the Assistance of the French; other Parts seemed to enjoy a tolerable State of Rest. But on a sudden appeared the Beginnings

A. D. of new Movements, which were excited 1516. by the Operation of the King of Aragon, who being apprehensive that his Kingdom of Naples would be endangered by the Greatness of the King of France, treated with Cæsar and the King of England about commencing a new War against him. It was not difficult to prevail on Maximilian, who was always desirous of Novelties, and could hardly of himself preserve the Towns taken from the Vene- tians, to come into his Measures: And the King of England, on whom the Memory of his Father-in-law's Breach of Promises had less Influence than his present Emulation and Hatred of the King of France, also gave his Consent, to which he was besides stimulated by his Desire that the King of Scotland in his Minority should be under the Tutelage of Persons either recommended by him, or dependent on him *. But their Designs would have been prosecuted with better <sup>A. D.</sup> Conduct, and with greater Forces, if <sup>1516.</sup> there had not intervened, while they were on the Carpet, the Death of the King of <sup>Death and</sup> Aragon, who, after labouring under a <sup>Character</sup> tedious Indisposition, died in <sup>of the</sup> January at <sup>King of</sup> Madrigalegio, a very poor Village, in his <sup>Aragon.</sup> Progress with his Court to Seville *. He was a Prince of most excellent Wisdom and Valour, and if he had made Conscience of keeping his Promises would hardly have left Room for Censure; for that niggardly and tenacious Temper, for which he was calumniated, was demonstrated a Falshood by his Death, when after a Reign of Forty-two Years he left no Treasure of Money behind him. But it almost constantly happens, through the depraved Judgment of Men, that in Kings Prodigality, tho' in conjunction with Rapacity, is reckoned more commendable than Parsimony when joined with abstaining from the Property of others. 1516. of this King were attended with a very rare Prosperity, which, if you except the Death of an only Son, was perpetual and uninterrupted during the whole Course of his Life; for the Misfortunes of the Females and of his Son-in-law were the Occasion of his retaining his Greatness till his Death, and the Necessity of his departing out of Castile on the Death of his Consort was rather a Sport than a Stroke of Fortune. In all other Events he was extremely fortunate; being the second Son of the King of Aragon he obtained that Kingdom by the Death of his elder Brother; by contracting Marriage with Isabella he enjoyed the Kingdom of Castile, victoriously driving away his Adversaries who were in Competition with him for that Crown. After this he recovered the Kingdom of Granada, which had been in the Possession of the Enemies of our Faith near Eight Hundred Years. He added to his Dominions the Kingdoms of Naples and Navarre, with Oran and many other important Places on the Coasts of Africa. Ever superior, and almost always Conqueror wherever he met his Enemies, and where where Fortune appeared in manifest Conjunction with Industry, he usually covered his ambitious Desires with the Cloke of a laudable Zeal for Religion, and a pious Intention of promoting the common Welfare. About a Month before his Death died the Great Captain, absent from Court, and dissatisfied with his Prince. The King however was pleased to have such Honours paid to the Memory of his noble Exploits, both by himself and by the whole Kingdom, as were seldom shewn to any in Spain but at the Death of Kings, for which he was highly applauded by all the People, to whom the Name of the Great Captain for his boundless Liberality was most precious, and for the Reputation of his Prudence, and Skill in the military Art, above all the Generals his Cotemporaries, was had in the highest Veneration.

By the Death of the Catholic King the King of France was the more animated to the Enterprize against Naples, on which he was inclined to send immediately the

A. D. 1516. Lances and Ten Thousand Foot, persuading himself that, from the Tumults excited in that Kingdom on occasion of the Death of the King, and its ill State of Defence, the Archduke being unable to send any Succours in Season, he might easily make himself Master of it. He doubted not that the Pope, on account of the Hopes he had given him when they met together at Bologna, and the Friendship they had contracted together at the Interview, would be favourable to the Undertaking; and no less out of Regard to his own Interest, since he must of necessity take Umbrage at the exorbitant Greatness of the Archduke, the Inheritor of so many Kingdoms left him by the Catholic King, and the presumptive Successor of Cæsar. He was besides in Hopes that the Archduke, being sensible that to have him for his Enemy might be of great Prejudice to his Endeavours in settling the Kingdom of Spain, and particularly the Kingdom of Aragon, to which, if Power had been joined to Right, some of the same Family would have aspired, would proceed with Moderation in opposing posing him. For while the late King and his Confort Ifabella were living it had <sup>A. D. 1516.</sup> indeed been interpreted that, in the antient Succession Parliaments of that Kingdom which ex-<sup>of Aragon.</sup> cluded Females from the Succession, it was not intended to prejudice the Males born of them, when in the male Line there were no Brothers, Uncles, or Nephews of the late King, or of one who was nearer to him than the Issue by the female Side, or at least in an equal Degree, and on this Account the Succession was declared to belong to the Archduke Charles after the Death of Ferdinando. But tho' for this was brought as a Precedent that Martin King of Aragon dying without male Issue, Ferdinando the Grandfather of this Ferdinando had, by the Sentence of the Judges deputed from all Parts of the Kingdom for this Purpose, tho' related to Martin by the female Line, been preferred to the Count of Urgel and the others related to Martin by the male Line, but in a more remote Degree than Ferdinando, yet there had been always to this present Time a secret Murmuring among the People that in this Interpretation and Declaration

A. D. Declaration the Power of Ferdinando and 1516. Isabella had more Influence than Justice, it appearing to many not a just Interpretation that Females should be excluded, and yet their Issue admitted, and that the Sentence given for old Ferdinando was rather extorted by the Fear of his Arms than a Conviction of Reason. The King of France being well apprised of these Things, and knowing also that the People of the Provinces of Aragon, and Valentia, and of the County of Catalonia, which are all comprehended under the Kingdom of Aragon, were desirous of having a King of their own, was in Hopes that the Archduke, to avoid endangering his Succession to so many great and considerable States, would at last be induced to yield him the Kingdom of Naples on some reasonable Composition. At the same Time, to gain his Ends by Favour as well as by Force, he was pleased that Prospero Colonna, who had agreed to ransom himself for 35000 Ducats, should be released for half that Sum; whence many were of Opinion that Prospero had made him a secret Promise not to bear Arms against him, him, or perhaps to be assistant to him in A. D. the Neapolitan War, tho' with some Re-<sup>1516.</sup> striction or Reserve to save his Honour.

WHILE the King's Thoughts were taken up with these Projects, and he was on the Point of resolving to put his Troops in Motion without Delay, he found himself obliged by some new Incidents to turn all his Cares on providing for his own Defence: For Cæsar having received, in Consequence of the Negotiations before begun with the King of Aragon, an Hundred and Twenty Thousand Ducats, was preparing, according to his Agreement with that King, to attack the Dutchy of Milan, after he had first put Succours into Verona and Brescia, which was necessary because the Venetian Army, now under the Command of Teodoro da Trivulzi appointed <sup>Actions of Parties.</sup> General after the Return of Trivulzio to Milan, was encamped within Six Miles of Brescia, and with their Stradiotti scoured the whole Country. The Garrison of Brescia one Day made a Sally on these Rovers, but after a sharp Contest, each Party receiving continual Reinforcements,
were

A. D. 1516. were repulsed within the Walls with the Loss of many killed on the Spot, and the Brother of the Governor of the City was taken Prisoner. Within a few Days after Lautrech, General of the French Army, and Teodoro da Trivulzi, receiving Intelligence that Three Thousand German Foot were escorting a Sum of Money sent to pay the Soldiers, detached Janus Fregoso and Giancurrado Orsino with some Troops selected out of both Armies to the Castle of Anfo to prevent their Passage, who killed about Eight Hundred of the Germans, the rest with the Money escaping to Lodrone. The Venetians sent afterwards Twenty-five Hundred Foot into the Val di Sabbia, to fortify the Castle of Anfo, who burnt Lodrone and Astorio.

Maximilian's Expedition into Italy,

THE Danger that Brescia, thus distressed and molested, would surrender, obliged Cæsar to hasten his March. He led with him Five Thousand Horse, Fifteen Thousand Swiss granted him by the Five Cantons, and Ten Thousand Spanish and German Foot, and took the Road from Trento to Verona. The French and Venetian netian Army therefore, leaving good Gar- A. D. risons in Vicenza and Padoua, went and posted themselves at Peschiera, with a Design, as it was pretended, to prevent the Emperor from passing the River Mincio.

But the Execution, as it often happens, did not answer the Resolution; for as soon as they perceived the Approach of the Enemy, they had not Courage enough to execute in the Field what they had resolved in their Tents, but passed the Oglio, and retired to Cremona, the Reputation and Boldness of the Enemy increasing as their own diminished. Cæsar, either induced by bad Counsel, or impelled by his evil Fortune, halted to besiege Afola, which had a Garrison of an Hundred Men at Arms and Four Hundred Venetian Foot, where he spent several Days to no Purpose, which Delay is undoubtedly believed to have been the Cause of his ill Success.

Decamping from Afola he passed the River Oglio at Orci Nuovi, and the Enemy leaving in Cremona Three Hundred Lances and Three Thousand Foot retired on the other Side the Adda, with an Intent to dispute the Passage of that River. By their

A. D. 1516. { their Retreat the Emperor became Master of all the Country between the Oglio, the Po, and the Adda, except Cremona and Crema, the first garrisoned by the French, and the other by the Venetians. Cæsar was attended by the Cardinal of Sion, by many Exiles of the Dutchy of Milan, and by Marc' Antonio Colonna in the Service of the Pope with Two Hundred Men at Arms. His Progress struck the greater Terror into the French, as their chief Hopes depended on the speedy March of Sixteen Thousand Swiss, to whom they had advanced three Months Pay. Cæsar, after passing the Oglio, proceeded to the River Adda, designing to pass it at Pizzichitone, but finding that his Passage would be difficult at that Place, he marched to Rivolta, the French being drawn up in Order at Casciano on the other Side of the River. But the Swiss not being yet arrived, and the Adda being fordable in several Places, the next Day the French Army retired to Milan, not without reproachful Reflexions on Lautrech, who had published, and written to the King, that he would stop Cæsar from passing that River. That Prince having having thus passed without Opposition, the City of Lodi immediately surrendered to him; and from thence approaching within a few Miles of Milan he sent a Herald to demand the Town, threatening the Milanese that if they did not drive away the French Army within three Days he would treat their City worse than it was treated by his Predecessor Frederic Barbarossa. That Emperor, not contented with burning and demolishing Milan, caused the Ground on which it stood to be sowed with Salt, in Memory of his Anger and of the Rebellion of the Citizens.

BUT among the French, who were retired under great Consternation into Mi-<sup>French</sup> lan, was a Variety of Proposals; some in-consult at Milan.
clining basely to abandon the Town, because they did not think themselves in a Condition to oppose the Enemy, nor did believe that the Swiss, though they were known to be already on the Road, would ever arrive; for they had Intelligence that the Cantons had either already ordered, or were upon the Point of ordering, that the Swiss should relinquish the Service of

A. D. 1516 both the hostile Parties ; and it was doubted that the Troops on the Road would be more ready to pay Obedience to the Orders of their Masters, than those in the Service of the Enemy. Others detested this Resolution of a Departure as infamous and disgraceful, and putting more Confidence in the Coming of the Swiss, and in their own Ability to defend the City, advised taking the best Measures for its Preservation, and that laying aside all Thoughts of hazarding a Battle they should keep all the Foot with Eight Hundred Lances in Milan, and distribute the other Forces with those of the Venetians and all the light Horse into the neighbouring Towns, to guard them, and to cut the Enemies short of Provisions. The first Counsel, however, would have been followed, had it not been earnestly dissuaded by Andrea Gritti and Andrea Trivisano the Venetian Proveditors, whose Authority yet could do no more than just prevail with them not to be too hasty in their Resolution to depart, so that when they had now determined to be gone, certain Advice came that Alberto Petra with Ten Thousand Swiss and Grisons

Grifons would the next Day be in Milan. A. D.

This News revived the drooping Spirits <sup>1516.</sup> of all; but not depending, however, on their own Strength for the Defence of the Suburbs, they retired within the Walls, setting Fire to the Suburbs by Advice of the Venetian Proveditors, who gave them this Counsel, either because they judged it necessary for the Preservation of the City, or because they were willing to take this Opportunity to gratify the antient Enmity that subsisted between the Milanese and Venetians. They expelled also out of the City, or kept under honourable Custody, many of the principal Persons of the Ghibelline Party, as inclined to embrace the Authority of the Empire out of Zeal for a Faction, and because there were such Numbers of them with the German Army.

CÆSAR in the mean time took Post with his Army at Lambra two Miles from Milan. While he was there the Swiss arrived in that City, where they professed themselves ready to defend Milan, but refused to go out to Battle against the other Swiss. Their Coming put new Spirits in ror to Cæsar, who, considering the inveterate Hatred of that Nation against the House of Austria, and recalling to Mind what had happened to Lodovico Sforza from a Meeting of opposite Swiss, began to be apprehensive that they would serve him in the same Manner, since he thought them more likely to deceive him who lay under Difficulties how to pay them, than the French, who wanted no Money to pay, or corrupt them. And his Suspicions were increased because Giacopo Stafflier, Commander in Chief of the Swiss, had with great Arrogance demanded of him the Pay, which, not to mention other Difficulties, was deferred because the Money that was coming from Germany was stopped by the Spanish Foot who were in Garrison at Brescia for the Payment of their Arrears. Maximilian therefore, in a wonderful Commotion from the Fear of his Danger, decamped in a Hurry, and retired towards the Adda*, none doubting but

Milan.

* Trivulzio wrote counterfeit Letters directed to the chief Officers of the Swiss, in which he put them in Mind of executing what they had promised him by the Agree-

but if he had approached Milan three A. D. Days sooner, which Time he wasted before Afola, the French, who were then under much greater Doubt and Uncertainty of the Coming of the Swiss, would have returned beyond the Mountains : Or, even if he had not so soon decamped, it was firmly believed that either the French, who had no full Confidence in the Faith of the Swiss because of the Regard they shewed to their Countrymen with Cæsar, would have followed the first Counsel ; or that the Swiss themselves, taking an Excuse from the Commandment of their Superiors, which was already published, would have abandoned the French. 1516.

CÆSAR passed the River Adda, but was not followed by the Swiss, who halted at Lodi, protesting they would depart if they were not paid within four Days. But Cæsar, who was encamped in the Territory of Bergamo, continually gave them Hopes of Payment, saying that he

A. D. 1516. expected new Supplies of Money from the King of England, and threatened to return to Milan. These Proceedings held in vast Suspense the French, who were more uncertain than ever of the Faith of the Swiss, who, besides the Slowness which they purposely used in coming, and their constant Asseverations that they would never fight against the Swiss in the Enemy's Army, had received the Orders of the Cantons commanding them to quit the French Service, in Obedience to which about Two Thousand of them were already gone, and it was feared that the rest would follow them, though the Cantons on the other hand assured the King that they had sent private Orders to their Troops not to quit him. At last Cæsar, after exacting Sixteen Thousand Ducats of the City of Bergamo, making a Motion, in Expectation of the Success of a Plot, towards Crema, and returning without Effect into the Bergamasco, resolved to set out for Trent. He acquainted the General Officers of the Army with his Resolution, and assured them that his Motive to it was from an Intention to provide himself self with new Supplies of Money, with A. D. 1516. which and those from the King of England now on the Road, he would soon be Cæsar returns in-glorious to Germany. with them, encouraging them to wait with Patience for his Return. His Army, after plundering Lodi, and forcing the Castle without Artillery, plundered also the Town of Sant' Angelo, being straitened for Want of Provisions, and then took up their Quarters in the Gbiaradadda. After the Departure of Cæsar there were some Hopes that the Swiss, who were joined by the whole Army at Romano, would again have passed the Adda, because the Marquis of Brandenburg was arrived in the Camp, and the Cardinal of Sion at Bergamo with Thirty Thousand Ducats remitted by the King of England. Under this Apprehension the Duke of Bourbon, who had been left by almost all the Swiss, and by the Venetians, was advanced with the Army to the further Bank of the River. But the Designs of the Enemy were easily frustrated, for the Swiss, not finding the Money that was brought sufficient to pay their Arrears, returned by the Valley of Valtelina into their own Country ; and for

A. D. the same Reason Three Thousand Foot, SUCH was the End of the Movement

Hundred Men at Arms to the Defence of the State of Milan, or at least order them to the Frontiers, and pay the Hire of Three Thousand Swiss, as he charged him with having offered by Antonio Maria Pallavicino, the Pope coldly answered as to the Payment of the Swiss, and excusing himself from sending his own Troops on account of their bad Condition, promised to send those of the Florentines, which accordingly put themselves on their March, with some of his own Soldiers, very slowly towards Bologna and Reggio. The Suspicion that the Pontiff was privy to this Expedition of Cæsar was increased by considering that his Holiness, on the first Advice that the Emperor was entered into Italy, appointed for his Legate to him Bernardo da Bibbiena, Cardinal of Santa Maria in Portico, who always used to oppose the French Interest at the Court of Rome; and much more by the Pope's permitting Marc' Antonio with his Troops to serve under Cæsar. But the Truth was that the Coming of the Emperor with so great a Force made the Pope uneasy on account of his own Interest, being apprehensive that Cæſar, if he ſhould come off Conqueror, would, according to his antient Inclination, attempt to oppreſs all Italy; yet out of Fear, and becauſe it was agreeable to his Nature to proceed in this Manner, he concealed his own Sentiments, and endeavoured to render himſelf as little obnoxious as poſſible to either Party. Wherefore he durſt not recall Marc' Antonio, nor durſt he ſend the ſtipulated Auxiliaries to the King, and he appointed a Legate to Cæſar. And on the other Hand when Cæſar had broke up from Milan, he contrived that the Legate, on Pretence of Sickneſs, ſhould ſtop at Rubiera, and look about him, before he proceeded any further, and obſerve on which Side the Victory ſeemed to incline; and after this, to ſoften the King's Heart, he was pleaſed that his Nephew Lorenzo ſhould continue the ſame diſſembling Profeſſions of Dependence on him which he had begun at Milan, and ſhould cauſe the Florentines to preſent him with a Month's Pay for Three Thouſand Swiſs. The King accepted the Money, but to ſhew that he had a right Notion of the Pope's Pope's Artifices, said that, since he found him always contrary to him in War, and that his Confederacy did him no Service in Times of Danger, he would make a new League with him, which should bind him only in Times of Peace and Security.

CÆSAR's Army being broken, the Venetians, without waiting for the French, one Night on a sudden approached Brescia with Scaling-Ladders, trusting to the Smallness of the Garrison, which amounted to no more than Six Hundred Spanish Foot, and Four Hundred Horse; but the Ladders proving too short, and the Defendants making a vigorous Resistance, the Attempt miscarried. After this arrived the French Army under the Command of Odet de Foix, lately appointed Governor of Milan in the Place of the Duke of Bourbon, who had resigned. The two Armies now in conjunction play'd upon Brescia from four Batteries, in order to render it impossible for the few Defendants to resist in so many Places. The Garrison however defended themselves as long as they had any Hopes that

Seven

A. D. 1516 Brescia recovered by the Venetians. Seven Thousand Foot of the County of Tirol, which by Orders from Cæsar were come to Montagnana, would advance forwards; but as all Attempts for that Purpose were frustrated by the Opposition which the Venetians made at the Castle of Anfo and at other Passes, they did not care to stand the Assault which was to be given the next Day, a great Length of the Wall being ruined, but capitulated on Condition that the Soldiers might march out of the Town and Castle only with their Effects if they were not relieved within Twenty-four Hours.

Pope covets the Dutchy of Urbino. At the same Time the Pope prepared to deprive Francesco Maria della Rovere by Force of Arms of the Dutchy of Urbino, and begun to proceed against him with Censures, publishing a Monitory, in which was expressed that the Duke being in the Service of the Church had refused her the Troops for which he had received her Pay, and had made a secret Agreement with her Enemies; the Murder he had so long ago committed of the Cardinal of Pavia, of which he had been absolved by by Grace, not by Justice; other Murders A. D. 1516. perpetrated by him; that in the greatest Heat of the War against Pope Julius, whose Nephew, Subject, and General he was, he had sent Baldassarre da Castiglione to lift in the King's Service; that he had at the same time refused a Passage to some Troops that were marching to join the Army of the Church; and that in the State which he held as a Feudatary of the Apostolic See, he had persecuted the Soldiers of the same See in their Flight from the Battle of Ravenna. The Pope had formed a Design to attack the Duke several Months before, being not only provoked against him by late Offences, but by the Memory of his former Refusal to assist his Brother and him in their Return to Florence; but he was restrained in some measure by the Shame of persecuting the Nephew of a Pope by whose Means the Church had arrived to such a Height of Grandeur, and much more by the Intreaties of his Brother Giuliano, who in the Time of their Exile having lived many Years in the Court of Urbino with the Duke Guido, and after his Death with the present

1516. present Duke, could not bear to see him deprived by his own Family of that Dutchy in which he himself had been supported and honoured. But Giuliano dying of a lingering Disorder in Florence, and Cæsar's Undertaking proving abortive, the Pontiff, stimulated by Lorenzo his Nephew and Alfonfina his Mother, who coveted the Appropriation of that State to themselves, resolved to delay no longer, alledging, to acquit himself of Ingratitude, with which he was charged by many, not only the Injuries received from the Duke, with the Penalties which, according to the Disposition of Justice, were incurred by a Vassal who was contumacious to his Lord, and by a Soldier, who being under military Obligations, and having received Money, refused his Troops to one who had paid him, but much more the Danger of tolerating in the Bowels of his State a Man who, having already, without any Regard to Faith or Honour, begun to offend him, he might be certain, would not fail, when a fairer Opportunity offered, to be so much the

in Time to come. 1516.

IN the Prosecution of this War, as soon as Lorenzo, with an Army composed of the Soldiers and Subjects of the Church and of the Florentines, touched upon the Borders of that Dutchy, the City of Urbino, with the other Towns of that State, freely submitted to the Pontiff, the Duke, who was retired to Pesaro, consenting that, since he could not defend them, they should consult their own Safety. Pesaro did the same as soon as the Enemy came before it; for tho' it had within it Three Thousand Men, the City was fortified, and the Sea open, yet Francesco Maria, leaving Tranquillo da Mondolfo his Confident in the Castle, set out thence for Mantoua, whither he had before sent his Wife and Son, either putting no Confidence in his Soldiers, or as many, excusing his Fear with his Love, affirmed, because he could not bear to be absent from his Confort. Thus was the Dutchy of Urbino, together with Pesaro and Sinigaglia, in the Space of four Days reduced under

A. D. under the Obedience of the Church, ex-1516. cept the Castles of Sinigaglia, Pesaro, San Leo, and Rocca di Majuolo. But the Castle of Sinigaglia immediately after surrendered, and the Castle of Pesaro, tho' very strong, after two Days Battery, agreed to surrender if it were not relieved in twenty Days, on Condition that no new Fortifications or Batteries should be made during that Time, which Agreement being but ill observed was the Occasion that Tranquillo, who had received no Succours within the Term prefixed, refusing to yield up the Castle, began to fire his Cannon anew, and made a Sally upon the advanced Guards of the Besiegers.
But his Fate was the harder, for Lorenzo, as soon as he had taken Possession of the Town, returning to Florence, the Generals that were left with the Army had cast Intrenchments about the Castle, and manned out some Vessels to prevent all Relief by Sea, and when the Time for surrendering was expired the Batteries immediately began to fire. But on the same Day the Soldiers of the Garrison mutinied against Tranquillo, and for their own Security delivered

livered him into the Hands of the commanding Officers of the Besiegers, who, as a Punishment for his breaking the Capitulation, sentenced him to be hanged on a Gallows. A few Days after surrendered the Fortrefs of Majuolo, which was a Place the Possession of which was necessary for forming the Siege of San Leo, since it is but a Mile distant from it, and situated over against it.

ABOUT San Leo were posted Two Thousand Foot, to keep it blocked up, because it was so very strong by its Situation that there were no Hopes of reducing it but by Famine. The Place however was three Months after taken by a Stratagem owing to a Carpenter, who one Night by means of a very long Ladder getting upon a Precipice or Cliff, esteemed the most difficult of that Mountain, ordered the Ladder to be taken away, and remaining in that Place the whole Night, as soon as Day appeared set about climbing by the Help of some iron Instruments, till he made his Way at last to the Top of the Mountain, whence descending,

A. D. and with his Instruments rendering easier 1516. some of the most difficult Places, he returned the next Night by the same Ladder to the Camp. Here giving Assurances that the Mountain might be climbed, he returned on a Night appointed by means of the same Ladder to his Post, and was followed by One Hundred and Fifty of the choicest Foot; and after they had lodged during the Night on the Precipice, because it was impossible to climb in the Dark, they began at Break of Day to ascend Man after Man by those very narrow Places, and about thirty of them, with a Drum and six Colours, were already got to the Top of the Mountain, where they lay close to the Ground expecting their Companions who were clambering after them, when it being now broad Day, a Watch of the Garrison going off from their Post espied those who lay prostrate on the Ground, and gave the Alarm. The Men seeing themselves discovered, without waiting for their Companions, gave the Signal, as they had agreed, to those in the Camp, who, according to the Orders that had been given, with with a Multitude of Ladders suddenly attacked the Mountain in many Places to distract the Garrison, who running to their appointed Posts, and being terrified at the Sight of six Colours within their Fortifications, who were scouring the Plain on Top, and had already killed some of them, betook themselves to the Castle which was built on the Mountain. But the others who had by this time climbed up after their Companions, opened the Gate which gives an Entrance upon the Mountain, and so gave Admission to those who had not as yet climbed. The Mountain being thus taken, the Garrison of the Castle, tho' it was well provided with all Necessaries, surrendered the second Day. After the Conquest of this State, which, together with Pesaro and Sinigaglia, separate Members from the Dutchy of Urbino, yield not a Revenue of more than Twenty-five Thousand Ducats, Leo, following the Process which he had begun, deprived Francesco Maria of these Dominions by solemn Sentence, and afterwards gave the Investiture of them in a Consistory to Lorenzo his Nephew, all the

 Effect. But Domenico Grimano, Bishop
Lorenzo de' Medici of Urbino, and a great Friend to the Duke, invested with the refused to concur with the rest, and there-Dutchy of fore, being apprehensive of the Anger of Urbino. the Pope, a few Days after departed from Rome, and did not return till after his Death.

THE King of France was displeased at the Ruine of the Duke of Urbino, who was deprived of his State for treating with his Majesty. But he was more displeased at many of the Pope's Actions ; for Prospero Colonna, when he returned from France, having stopt at Busseto, a Town of the Pope dis- Pallavicini, and from thence, suspecting affected to the French, removed to Modena, met with Interest. Girolamo Morone, who was also retired thither as a Place of Safety, being apprehensive of the French, because, contrary to their Promises, they had ordered that he should go for France. These two were continually plotting all the Time that Prospero stayed at Modena, and afterwards at Bologna, how to surprize, by means of some some Exiles, some important Place of the Dutchy of Milan, in which Design they had also the Concurrence of Muzio Colonna, to whom the Pope, being privy to the Plot, had granted Quarters for his Regiment in the Modense. Besides this, the Pope had advised the Catholic King (which was now the Title of the Archduke by the Death of his maternal Grandfather) to enter into no new Agreements with the King of France: And Ennio Bishop of Veruli, Apostolic Nuncio, and afterwards, though almost decrepit, promoted to the Cardinalship, besides doing many other ill Offices to the King with the Swiss, exhorted the Five Cantons to cultivate the Friendship of the Emperor. Hence, as a Treaty was at the same time carrying on between Cæsar (who, keeping himself between Trent and Inspruck, terrified the French more with Noise and Show than Efforts) the King of England, and the Swiss, for making a fresh Attack on the Dutchy of Milan, the King of France was apprehensive that these Affairs were transacted with the Consent of the Pontiff, whose evil Disposition appeared also in another Instance, by raising Difficulties, and making various Exceptions in granting him the Tenth of the Benefices of the Kingdom of France, which he had promised him at Bologna. Such, however, is the Majesty of the Pontificate that the King studied to pacify him by many kind Offices; hence when he designed, after the Departure of the Emperor, to send Troops to exact Contributions of Money from Mirandola, Carpi and Correggio, as Imperial Towns, he desisted on the Pope's remonstrating that he had before taken the Lords of those Places under his Protection. And when the Moors of Africa with a Multitude of Ships infested the Lower Sea*, the King offered, for the Security of those maritime Parts, to send a good Fleet of Ships, which Pietro Navarra was by his Consent fitting out at Marseilles, to be manned with Six Thousand Foot, for attacking, with a View only to Plunder, the maritime Places of Barbary. The Pontiff, however, not altering his his Sentiments, though he partly denied, <sup>A. D.</sup> and partly excused the Facts, never gave <sup>1516.</sup> ear in the least to the earnest Importunities of the King for removing the Bishop of Veruli from Swisserland. Nor did he ever remove Muzio Colonna from the Modenese, where, as he pretended, he took up his Residence by his own Authority, till, by the Departure of Prospero Colonna from Bologna, and the entire Frustration of what they had been so long concerting, his Stay was become of no Importance. But his Departure proved most unfortunate to him, for not long after, having with the Forces of the Colonna's and some Spanish Foot surpris'd Fermo by Night, while he was busy in plundering the City, he received a Wound, of which he died in a few Days.

IN this State of Affairs the Venetian Senate being importunate for the Recovery of Verona, Lautrech having in his Army Six Thousand German Foot, whom the Venetians had agreed to pay for this Enterprize, advanced to the Adice, with a Design to pass that River at Ufolingo, and in

A. D. conjunction with the Venetian Army to 1516. lay Siege to Verona. But afterwards Lautrech the Report of the Coming of the declines Swiss increasing, and the Umbrage taken the Siege at the Stay of Prospero Colonna in Mo- of Verona. dena being augmented, because the Cardinal of Santa Maria in Portico had taken up his Residence in the same City, the French General drew off his Forces, not without the Complaints of the Venetians, and retired to Peschiera, distributing his Troops in the Territory on both Sides of the River Mincio. And though all Fears and Jealousies on the abovementioned Accounts were ceased, and above Two Thousand Spanish and German Foot had deserted from Verona, and enlisted under the Ve- netians, and Deserters continually came over, he remained in those Quarters above a Month, expecting, as he said, some Money from France, and that the Ve- netians would make greater Provision of Money, Artillery and Ammunition. But the truer Reason was his Expectation of the Success of the Negotiations between his Master and the Catholic King. For the King of France knowing how necessary his

his Friendship was to the other King, in order to remove the Difficulties of his Passage into Spain, and for the Establishment of those Kingdoms, was not content with the Agreement which they had before concluded at Paris, but endeavoured to impose on him harder Conditions, and to make Peace by his Mediation with the Emperor, which could not be effected without the Restitution of Verona to the Venetians. And the King of Spain, by the Advice of M. de Cbeures, by whose Authority, being as yet but fifteen Years of Age, he was wholly governed, did not refuse to accommodate his Resolutions to Times and Necessities.

THERE assembled therefore at Noyon, on the Part of the King of France, the Bishop of Paris, the Grand Master of the Household, and the President of the Parliament of Paris; and on the Part of the Catholic King, the said M. de Cbeures, and the Grand Chancellor of the Empire. While Lautrech expected the Event of this Congress, the Soldiers, according to the Custom of the Military in our Age, were continually at Noyon.

A. D. continually employing their Arms against 1516. the unhappy Peasants. For while Lautrech, after laying a Bridge at the Country Seat of Monzarbanio, was employed in cutting off the Corn in the Fields of the Territory of Verona, and in scouring all the Country with his light Horse, and a Part of his Troops, quartered in the Mantouan, did such vast Damage to that Country that the Marquis of Mantoua, to free himself from the Trouble of Quarters, was content to pay the General Twelve Thousand Crowns, the Garrison of Verona made daily Incursions into the Vicentine and Padouan, and plundered the miserable City of Vicenza. Lautrech, however, afterwards being stimulated by the moving Complaints of the Venetians, passed the Adice by the Bridge laid at Uso-lingo, and having made a vast Booty in the Country, because it was not in the least imagined that the Army would pass on that Side, came before Verona with an Intent to lay close Siege to it, having in the mean time with the Assistance of the Men of the Country taken Possession of Chiusa, in order to render more difficult the the Passage of the Succours which might <sup>A. D.</sup> be sent from Germany. But the very Day <sup>1516.</sup> that he approached Verona the German Infantry, either voluntarily, or at his secret Instigation, though they had been maintained three Months at the Cost of the Venetians, protested they would not, where the principal Interest of the King of France was not concerned, fight against any Town in the Possession of Cæsar. Lautrech therefore repassed the Adice, and encamped at the Distance of a Mile from the Walls of Verona; and the Venetian Army, which consisted of Five Hundred Men at Arms, as many light Horse, and Four Thousand Foot, not thinking itself secure on the farther Side of the River, passed it and joined him.

AT this Juncture, the Commissioners of the two Kings came to an Agreement <sup>Treaty of</sup> on the Fifteenth Day of August at Noyon, <sup>Noyon.</sup> on the following Conditions: That between the Kings of France and Spain there shall be a perpetual Peace, and a Confederacy for the Defence of their Dominions against all Powers whatsoever: That the

A. D. King of France shall give his Daughter, 1516. then a Year old, in Marriage to the Catholic King, and shall make over to her in Dowry the Right which he claims to the Kingdom of Naples according to the Partition formerly made by their Predecessors, but with this Proviso, that till the Daughter comes to an Age fit for Matrimony the Catholic King shall pay every Year to the King of France towards her Maintenance an Hundred Thousand Crowns; but if she should die before her Marriage, and the King should have another Daughter, she shall be given to the Catholic King on the same Conditions; and in case there should be none, then Renée should be given, who had been promised in the Treaty made at Paris: That if any one of these Ladies died in Marriage without Children, that Part of the Kingdom of Naples shall revert to the King of France: That the Catholic King shall restore the Kingdom of Navarre to its antient King within a certain Time; and, if it be not restored, it shall be lawful for the King of France to assist him in the Recovery of it: But this Clause was to be understood, as the Spaniards afterwards affirmed, with the Proviso, if that King first gave him satisfactory Evidence of his Right: That Cæsar shall have Liberty to accede to this Peace within the Term of two Months, and it shall be lawful for the King of France to assist the Venetians in the Recovery of Verona; but if Cæsar deposit that City in the Hands of the Catholic King, with free Liberty to surrender it within Six Weeks to the King of France to be disposed of at his Discretion, he shall receive of Francis an Hundred Thousand Crowns, and the like Sum of the Venetians, Part of it at the Time of Surrendry, and the rest within Six Months, and shall moreover be acquitted of about Three Hundred Thousand Crowns received of King Lewis when they were in Confederacy; and that in such a Case there shall be a Truce between Cæsar and the Venetians for Eighteen Months: And that Cæsar shall remain in Possession of Riva di Trento and Rovere, with all that he possesses at present in Friuli; and the Venetians continue to hold the Castles belonging to Cæsar which they keep at present, till the Kings of France and

A. D.

A. D. 1516. and Spain shall have decided the Differences between them concerning their Frontiers. Both Parties nominated the Pontiff.

besieged. THE Agreement made at Noyon did not prevent the Venetians from continually solliciting Lautrech to lay Siege to Verona, for they were uncertain whether the Emperor would accept the Peace, and they were desirous to recover it the sooner by Force of Arms because of the Quantity of Money they were to pay. On the other Part the King of France was better pleased with an Agreement than Force, for the Establishment of the Peace with Cæsar. Lautrech, however, had no Excuse left, for the Venetians had made great Levies of Foot, and made all the Provisions that he had demanded, and the Germans no longer refused to march with the rest, and therefore complied with their Desire. The Armies then passed the Adice separately, one by a Bridge laid above the City, the other by a Bridge laid below. The French posted themselves at Tomba, and planted Part of their Artillery against the Gate of Santa

Santa Lucia, and the rest, with the German Infantry, before the Gate of San <sup>A. D. 1516.</sup> Massimo, to play all on the Place where the Wall between the Cittadel and the City comes to join with the Wall of the Town, that, by making practicable Breaches for entering the City and Cittadel at once, the Defendants might be necessitated to divide themselves into two Parties separated by a Length of Wall. The Venetian Army passed the Adice below Verona into the Campus Martius, and posted itself at San Michele between the River and the Canal, with a Design to ruin the Defences on that Side, and to batter the Works towards Bishop's Gate, as the weakest and least fortified Place. In the two first Days they ruined with their Cannon the Defences, which were of considerable Strength; and the Batteries of the Venetians playing in Flank, though with greater Difficulty, destroyed the Outworks of three Bastions, on which they began on each Side to batter the Wall with eighteen heavy Cannon, and fifteen of a proper Size for Battery; and on the third Day each Army had made a Breach in the Wall of Seventy Braces,
and

A. D. and continued battering to make the 1516. Breaches much larger. But the Venetians, on whose Side the Wall was weaker, tho' they had in a manner levelled the Bastions and their Ramparts, yet they had not entirely destroyed the inner Defences that flanked them, for being so low, and almost within the Ditch, the Bullets either went over them, or buried themselves in the Earth before they came at them. At the same Time they undermined the Wall, which, though it was underpropped, fell before the Time designed by the Generals. In Verona were Eight Hundred Horse, Five Thousand German and Fifteen Hundred Spanish Foot, all under the Command of Marc' Antonio Colonna, who was no longer in the Service of the Pope but of Cæsar. The Besieged were very diligent in casting up Ramparts, providing for their Defence wherever it was necessary, and making a stout and resolute Resistance, highly to the Honour of Marc' Antonio, who being wounded, though but slightly, by a Musket Ball in the Shoulder, was never wanting, at any Hour of the Night as well as Day, to expose himself to all manner of Fatigues and Dangers. The Batteries

Batteries of the French, which were erected A. D.
1516. against the four Places where the Towers stood between the Gate of the Cittadel and the Gate of Santa Lucia, had now razed the Walls to such a Degree, that each of the Breaches was capable of receiving Soldiers in Line of Battle; and the Cannon of the Venetians had done as much Execution. Lautrech however demanded more Artillery for enlarging his Batteries, and without giving Ear to the Exclamations of the Venetians, who were continually stimulating him to storm the Place, was ready to embrace all Occasions for deferring the Assault. And it happened for his Purpose that a Convoy of Waggon, loaded with Eight Hundred Barrels of Powder, and great Quantities of Ball, coming to the Army through the Plains of Verona, through the Fault of the Drivers, who strove to get one before another, the rapid Motion of the Wheels struck Fire, which lighting in the Powder blew it up, together with the Waggon and the Oxen that drew them. But the Besieged were forced to struggle with other Difficulties, for in the City, which had now for so many Months been distressed by the Neighbourhood of the Enemy, there began to be a Scarcity of Provisions, none entering but in small Quantities, and by Way of the Mountains.

relieved.

SUCH was the melancholy Situation of Affairs in Verona, when there arrived Nine Thousand German Foot sent by Cæsar to relieve that City. These Troops advancing to Cbiusa got Possession of it by Agreement, and made themselves Masters of the Castle of Corvara, seated on a Hill, near the Adice, towards Trent, and several times taken and retaken in the War between Cæsar and the Venetians. On the Approach of these Forces Lautrech, struck with Fear either real or feigned, raised the Siege, contrary to the Will of the Venetians, and retired to Villafranca, accompanied by Part of the Venetian Troops, the rest, under Gian Pagolo Manfrone, retiring beyond the Adice, over a Bridge that was prepared, to Boseto. The Venetians therefore, despairing of making themselves Masters of Verona, sent all their heavy Artillery to Brescia; and the Germans

Germans finding no Opposition posted themselves at Tomba, where the French Army had encamped before, whence Part of them entered the City, and the other which remained without was employed in introducing Provisions into the Place, after which they departed, leaving in Verona a Garrison of between Seven and Eight Thousand German Foot, for most of the Spaniards, not being able to agree with the Germans, were, under Colonel Maldonato, gone over to the Venetians. It was the Opinion of the Public that this Relief was of no great Moment, for it brought no other Money than Twenty Thousand Rhenish Florins sent by the King of England, and the Troops consumed almost as great a Quantity of Provisions while they stayed as they had brought with them thither. As the Forces retired to Villafranca were daily eating up and exhausting the Veronese and Mantouan, and the French Troops no longer to be restrained by the Orders of their King from repairing to their Garrisons, the Venetians to keep them in the Field were obliged to supply them with all their necessary

A. D. necessary Food from the City of Brescia, 1516. which cost them above One Thousand Crowns a Day.

At last the Sinews of War were Verona re- slackened, and the Course of Affairs stored to manifestly tended towards a Peace; for the Vene- Advice was received that Cæsar, who tians, and had at first earnestly solicited his Nephew Peace had to make no Agreement with the King of made be- France, at length suffering his greedy tween Desire of Money to get the Ascendent them and over his natural Antipathy to the Name Cæsar. of the French, and his antient Project of subjecting Italy, had accepted and ratified the Peace, and had determined to restore Verona according to the Form of the Articles of the Agreement. Hence resulted another Event in Favour of the King of France; for all the Cantons of the Swiss, seeing a thorough Accommodation effected between Cæsar and him, and that both Parties had laid down their Arms, were inclined to make an Agreement with him as the Grifons had done before, Galeazzo Visconti mightily bestirring himself for that End. In recompense for this good Office

that Nobleman, who was in Disgrace <sup>A. D. 1516.</sup> with the King *, and an Exile, obtained of him Restoration to his Country, and in Process of Time many Favours and Honours.

By the Convention between the King of France and the Swiss it was agreed, <sup>Convention between the King of France and the Swiss.</sup> that the King should pay them within the Term of Three Months Three Hundred and Fifty Thousand Ducats, and from thenceforth a perpetual yearly Pension : That the Swiss should be obliged to grant Leave to the King by public Decree, whenever he should require it, to enlist into his Service a certain Number of their Foot : But in this Article the Swiss proceeded differently ; for the Eight Cantons obliged themselves to lend their Troops even when the King acted offensively against the States of others, but the Five Cantons no otherwise than for the Defence of his own Dominions : That it should be in the Power of the Swiss to restore to the King of France the Castles of Lugano and Lucerna, strong Passes, and * Orig. in Contumacia del Re, outlawed by the King.

1516. and of Importance to the Security of the Dutchy of Milan ; and that if they should chuse to restore them, the King should be bound to pay them Three Hundred Thousand Ducats : But as soon as the Convention was made, the Swiss demolished these Castles.

1517. THESE were the Transactions in Italy during the Course of the Year 1516 ; but in the Beginning of the next Year the Bishop of Trent came to Verona, and offered to Lautrecb, with whom he had a Conference between Villafranca and Verona, to resign that City, which, he said, he held in the Name of the King of Spain, to the King of France within the Term of Six Months appointed by the Articles. But a Difficulty remaining, whether the Term was to begin from the Day of the Ratification of Cæsar, or from the Day when it was acknowledged to be held for the King of Spain, some Days were spent in disputing the Point.
But the Troops at Verona, demanding their Pay in a tumultuous Manner, constrained the Bishop of Trent to hasten the Proceedings :

ceedings : Wherefore dating the Beginning A. D.
of the Term from the Day in which <sup>1517.</sup>

Cæſar had given him Commiſſion, he agreed to reſign Verona on the Fifteenth Day of January, at which Time having received of the Venetians the firſt Fifty Thouſand Ducats, and Fifteen Thouſand more, which according to the Convention were to be paid to the Troops in Verona, and of Lautrech a Promise that the Artillery in Verona ſhould be conveyed to Trent, he conſigned that City to Lautrech, who received it in the Name of the King of France, and immediately after, in the Name of the ſame King, conſigned it to the Venetian Senate, and, for them, to Andrea Gritti the Proveditor. But in-expreſſible was the Joy and Satisfaction of the Venetian Nobility and People for having at laſt ſeen a happy End of ſo long and dangerous a War, tho' after infinite Coſts and Trouble, for, as ſome of their Hiſtorians aſſure us, they expended in the whole War ſince the League of Cambray no leſs than five Millions of Ducats, of which Five Hundred Thouſand were raiſed by the Sale of Places. Incredible alſo

A. D. also were the Rejoicings of the Veronese <sup>1517.</sup> and of all the other Cities and People within the Jurisdiction of the Republic, since they now promised themselves, from the Benefit of Peace, to enjoy Rest and Quiet, and to be freed from that World of Vexations and Calamities, under which they had for a long Time so miserably suffered, sometimes from one and sometimes from the other of the contending Parties.
